Gary Admits Capital Makes Mistakes

PRESIDENT WILSON WORSE; NERVE SPECIALIST CALLED

JUDGE GAR GRILLED BY WALSH

Refuses to Arbitrate on Steel Strike or Treat With Gompers

Washington, Oct. 2.—At the Senate committee hearing today in the steel strike, Judge Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation, pressed by Senator Walsh of Massachusetts as to his unwillingness to arbitrate, admitted capital "made mistakes as well as labor."

"Then why not arbitrate such mistakes or differences?" asked Walsh.

"That depends upon the circumstances," Judge Gary replied.

He reiterated that he refused and would refuse to deal with Gompers and his associates or consider 'under any circumstances' any suggestion or proposal of compromise or arbitration with them.

"They don't represent a majority of our men, but only a small minority," Judge Gary persisted. "They know that themselves."

"I haven't a good opinion of the con-

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—Gover Alexander, Cubs' pitching star, believes the Reds will win the World's Series. Today he bet $10,000 they would do so. Chicago fans are looking for more bets of the same kind.

Redland Field, Cincinnati, O., Oct. 2.—Great baseball weather greeted the Reds and White Sox here this afternoon in the second game of the World's Series.

Redland Field was baked to mid-Summer crispness and the fans peeled off coats and collars. With the thermometer standing at 80 and the stingiest sort of a breeze lazily fanning the flags on the grand stand, it was a hot job for the athletes.

The bugs and bugetts did not come out quite so early today. The novelty of being among the first at Redland field wore off after they had waited some five hours for the first game to start in a broiling sun.

He declared that an Italian raiding party had entered Trau, and that Captain Hoyt, U. S. N., upon hearing of this, and knowing that Trau was occupied by Jugoslav troops, immediately dispatched the U. S. destroyer Cowell and the submarine chasers, and had followed himself in command of the United States battleship Olympia.

U.S. GREETS BELGIAN KING

Vice-President Marshall Extends Formal Welcome for President Wilson

New York, Oct. 2.—America's welcome to King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium was extended at noon today when the transport George Washington anchored at Hoboken.

As President Wilson's illness prevented his meeting the royal pair on their arrival Vice-President Marshall gave the official greeting. Secretary of State Robert Lansing, Secretary of War Newton D. Baker and General Payton C. March, chief of staff, were among the welcoming party. Governor Runyon was hand to represent New Jersey.

A military band played "Brabanconne," the Belgian national hymn, and the "Star Spangled Banner" as the King and Queen were escorted from the liner to the dock by a military guard. Formalities on the pier were brief.

The King missed his pleasure at being able to tell the people who had done so much for his native land and those the officials for the honors paid him. The King was deeply regretful over the news of President Wilson's illness and hoped he was better.

A flotilla of twelve destroyers under Rear Admiral Horace Plunkett escorted the George Washington as she steamed slowly up the Narrows

Wins Three-Cornered Race for Calcutta Despite Storm

Captain James Finnister of the British steamship Birmingham, in today from the Far East, is receiving congratulations upon winning a three-cornered race from Calcutta. The other contestants were the steamers Harwick Hall and the Matoppo, both under British registry.

The Harwick Hall left Calcutta August 11, seven days ahead of the other two, but they overtook her at Colombo. All three vessels got away from Colombo on August 27.

In mid-ocean the Birmingham encountered a gale so severe that Captain Finnister hove her to for twenty-four hours, preferring to risk winning the race to taking chances with his ship and her million-dollar cargo.

King Expresses Joy at Meeting 'Nation of Friends'

New York, Oct. 2.—King Albert of Belgium issued this statment to the American people on his arrival here today:

"At the moment of setting foot on American soil, the King of Belgium desires to express to the American people the great pleasure with which the Queen and he are coming to America's shores at the invitation of President Wilson. The King brings to this nation of friends testimony of the profound sentiments of gratitude of his countrymen for the powerful aid, moral and material, which America gave to them in the course of the war. The name of the commission for the relief of Belgium will live forever in the memory of Belgians.

"The King rejoices in the prospect of visiting the cities whose hearts fought with the cities of Belgium and whose continued sacrifices knew no measure. He is happy that he will meet the eminent citizens who, animated by the highest thoughts, placed themselves at the head of organizations for relieving war suffering. The American people, their splendid army and their courageous navy, nobly and powerfully served a great ideal."

RUSH TROOPS TO QUELL RACE RIOTING

Helena, Ark., Oct. 2.—Federal troops and special deputies are patrolling Elaine, near here, pending the arrival today of 500 troops from Camp Pike, ordered out to quell race riots in which three whites and seven negroes are reported killed and a score or more seriously injured.

The trouble started Tuesday night when Deputy Charles Pratt and W. A. Adkin, white, on their way to Hoop Spur, near Elaine, to arrest negros involved in a family quarrel, were ambushed by several negroes, who fired a round of shots at the officers, instantly killing Adkin and wounding Pratt.

A negro trusty who was with Pratt at the time of the shooting, notified the sheriff, warning him that a general uprising of negroes in that vicinity was planned.

A posse on entering Elaine to arrest the negroes were fired upon by a negro mob reported to number 1,500. Arming themselves with shot guns and revolvers, several posses from all sections of the county hurried to the aid of the white men at Elaine, and in the fighting which followed Clinton Lee and J. A. Tappes, white men of Elaine, and seven negroes were reported killed.

Sheriff Amos Jarmen said today that more than 100 negroes and a white man, said to have directed the negro mob in their attack on the posses, had been arrested.

'ON RAGGED EDGE,' SAYS GRAYSON

Washington, Oct. 2.—The condition President Wilson is "not at all good this morning," Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson declared today in his official bulletin.

At the same time it was announced that Dr. F. X. Dercum, of the University of Pennsylvania, one of the most noted nerve specialists in the country, would be called in to help in the treatment of the President.

Dr. Dercum, it was stated, was expected to arrive at the White House late this afternoon. Dr. George DeSchweinitz, also of the University of Pennsylvania, also has been summoned but he is the President's regular eye specialist, it is explained, and he is consulted twice a year regularly.

In making the announcement of the calling in of a specialist, Dr. Grayson asserted that there was absolutely no cause for alarm.

The President, he explained, was "on the ragged edge," and Dr. Grayson felt that it would be wiser to engage the services of a nerve specialist.

He also stated that he had consulted with Medical Director Stitt and Dentist of the Navy Department in reference to the President's case.

The decision to call in a specialist was prompted as much by the condition of Dr. Grayson as by the illness of the patient. Dr. Grayson has been with the President almost constantly and has been up at all hours of the night. Consequently he is himself worn out. The President is understood to have opposed the idea of calling in another physician and was persuaded only with difficulty that it was the best course to pursue.

The President was represented as being extremely anxious to get back to work and was continually chafing because he was allowed to attend to matters only of most routine, such as attaching his signature to various documents.

Dr. Grayson has practically decided to keep his patient in Washington, being convinced that he would receive more efficient treatment here and at the same time be afforded the seclusion that is necessary for complete recovery.

Dr. Grayson's official bulletin said:

"The President had a fairly good night, but his condition is not at all good this morning."

New York's official welcome begins at noon tomorrow when the King and Queen and Prince Leopold, the heir apparent, visit City Hall to receive the freedom of the city. Fifty thousand school children will take part in the exercises in Central Park at 3 o'clock in the afternoon in honor of the King. The royal family will attend a gala performance in the evening at the Hippodrome.

On Saturday, accompanied by the Baroness de Cartier de Marchionne, wife of the Belgian ambassador to America, Mrs. Brand Whitlock, wife of the American ambassador to Belgium, and Mrs. Hylan, wife of Mayor Hylan, Queen Elizabeth will visit army hospitals in this city.

The King and Queen Saturday morning will visit the Woolworth building and other places in the business district. At 10 o'clock in the evening they will visit the mass meeting of the American Legion in Madison Square Garden.

COME TO BOSTON SUNDAY.

The exact time for the departure of the visitors has not yet been determined, although they are due in Boston Sunday, when, with Cardinal Mercier, they will be the guests of that city. King Albert and Queen Elizabeth will stop at more than twenty cities in their tour of the country.

As the George Washington came up the harbor to Hoboken today salutes of 21 guns were fired from Castle William on Governor's Island. No stop was made at Quarantine. In and a motorcycle escort. The royal party will ride in open automobiles if weather permits.

The King and Queen, after a short stay in their suite at the Copley-Plaza, will start for the Cathedral at 9:40. Following mass they will return to their suite, leaving the church at 11:30.

Luncheon in the salon of the hotel at 1 o'clock will give Mayor Peters his opportunity of delivering Boston's message in full. The Mayor will make an informal address, and a reception tendered the Belgian relief committee will follow in the foyer. At the luncheon will be men representing the Commonwealth, the army, the navy, and several other groups. All have been approved by the State Department.

ADMISSION BY CARD.

Admission to the reception following luncheon will be by card only. Floral decorations are being arranged on an elaborate scale for the luncheon, and music will be provided the luncheon under the direction of Wallace Goodrich, dean of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Following the reception in the hotel the party will leave for Harvard at 3:45, where they will spend an hour with President Lowell. At 5 o'clock they will motor to the estate of Lars Anderson for tea, and at 6:35 will return to the hotel.

ROUTE TO CATHEDRAL.

On the trip to mass in the Cathedral Bostonians will have the best opportunity of seeing the crowned visitors, as the party will go to and from the Cathedral over different routes which will enable the public to choose their own point of vantage. In going to the Cathedral they will pass through Huntington avenue to West Newton street to Washington street, to the front entrance of the Cathedral. On their return they will travel along Washington street to Union Park to Montgomery to Dartmouth, and thence to the hotel.

In the afternoon residents of Cambridge may glimpse the party as they travel along Massachusetts avenue to the Johnson gate opposite Church street. Others may see the royal visitors along Longwood avenue, Riverway and Jamaica way as the party is on its way to the Lars Anderson estate.

Belgian Royal Pair and Mercier to Be Guests of Harvard

The King and Queen of the Belgians will visit Harvard today. They will be the guests of the university at a reception to be held in the Faculty Room of University Hall at 4 o'clock.

It is expected that the royal party will drive direct from Boston to University Hall, remain there for an hour or so, and then return. The announcement was made today at the university that, owing to the very limited space in the Faculty Room, only professors and assistant professors, accompanied by their wives, will be admitted to the reception.

It is a string coincidence that the visit to Harvard of the two distinguished Belgians, the King and Cardinal Mercier, will occur within twenty-four hours. Plans for the reception to Cardinal Mercier, which is to be held on Monday afternoon, are now being completed. The reception will be held at Sanders Theatre, and as is the custom on Commencement Day, the president, the corporation and overseers of the university, and members of the Harvard faculties along Longwood avenue, Riverway and Jamaica way as the party is on its way to the Lars Anderson estate.

DEADLOCK OVER TERMS IN RAIL STRIKE

Labor Leaders Leave Conference With Lloyd George; but One Point Gained

London, Oct. 2.—Following a second conference today between Premier Lloyd George and the Labor delegates, there were reports that a deadlock had developed over the question of conditions under which the railway strikers would return to work. The labor men were grave and silent when they came from the Downing street offices.

The only point gained in the conferences of the past twenty-four hours is the assurance of the Premier that there will be no reduction in wages for at least six months.

The chairman of strikers at an important rail centre telegraphed the Premier that the men would return to work if assured there would be no wage reductions before March. The Prime Minister gave such assurance in his reply.

CROWD JEERS GEDDES.

Sir Eric Geddes, minister of transport, was hissed by crowds when he went to call upon the Premier in Downing street. The police had to clear a passage for him through the press. Crowds of strikers followed Sir Eric, "booing" him.

Colonel Arthur Lynch, recent Labor candidate for Parliament, who will depart for the United States next week on a lecture tour, said that even if the strike failed it would show the unions their strength.

"The strike was poorly organized on an issue that was not very good, but it revealed solidarity," said Col. Lynch. "It has also shown the unions what is possible with better conceived plans and has revealed the weak spots."

MUST WORK TOGETHER.

"At the same time it has made plain the necessity for closer national contacts of the various unions. The leaders of the unions have been awakened to the necessity of knitting the organizations together with the ultimate aim of establishing a labor government."

According to the parliamentary lobbyist correspondent of the Daily Mail the officials of the transport workers' union are opposed to an extension of the strike and are trying to secure from the government an outline of a subsequent wage scale which would induce the railway men to return to work.

The Y. M. C. A. has established food stations all over the city. One is at Buckingham palace.

DENIES SOVIET RUMORS.

George Lansbury, editor of the Daily Herald, the labor organ and mouthpiece of the radicals declared:

"It is all bosh that we have a plan to topple over the King and establish a soviet regime in England. We can accomplish our purpose through Parliament and by constitutional means."

Lansbury believes that the strike could not last a month, and would undoubtedly end before that time if an effort was made to continue it.

"While the government might be able to feed the people, all of the important production would be halted, exports would cease and exchange rates would soon react against us," continued Lansbury.

Monied men would force a settlement of the deadlock in order to cut down their losses. Already the losses exceed the sum needed to meet the railroaders' demands for a couple of years.

REACTION ALL OVER WORLD.

"I am convinced that, if the government should win, the first step would be the forcing down of wages all round. The reaction would be felt in labor circles in France, Australia and America, as well as other places.

"Despite the gravity of the situation, the King has not called representatives of the interests involved to Buckingham palace. Evidently those in power would not allow the King to act. Yet in less grave affairs, notably the Ulster and House of Lords affairs, the King summoned a council.

"The absurdity of the government's policy in opposing an upward revision of wages is shown by the recent bill which A. Bonar Law defended, increasing the salaries of certain members of the cabinet from 2,500 pounds sterling to 15,000 annually. The railway men have a just grievance."

DORCHESTER MACHINE PLANT DAMAGED BY FIRE

Thousands of dollars' worth of damage resulted when the building at No. 130-136 Mt. Vernon street, Dorchester, was burned early today in a fire necessitating two alarms. The structure was occupied by the Underwood Machine Company, tenants for only the past six weeks. The machinery was considerably damaged. The blaze was discovered by Abraham Goldberg who sounded the first alarm.

HORSE FALLS INTO HIGH STREET DITCH

A large black horse attached to a pedler's wagon backed into the pipe ditch being dug on High street, near Federal street, today. The horse landed in the ditch on his hind legs and his pedlers rested on the edge of the ditch. A couple of bystanders unharnessed the horse and aided in extricating him.

GARY REFUSES ONCE MORE TO ARBITRATE

Steel Corporation Chief Says He Will Not Consent to Negotiation "at This Time"

duct of strikes by labor unions," he declared. "I haven't a good opinion of any of the demands made by labor unions. I am inclined to think there are two elements in the A. F. of L., although I am not competent to speak for them. But from the way they have conducted their campaign by threats and intimidation and assaults, and but for the action of the officers in vindicating the majesty of the law, there would have been conditions in this country which would have been very much regretted.

"Under the existing circumstances, every intelligent and fair-minded member of the labor organization should have said and should say now, 'There should be no strike.'"

Judge Gary said that he "regretted having to differ from the evident sentiment of some of the members of the committee" and added "I cannot consent to arbitration or compromise at this time."

Senator Jones of New Mexico pointed out that the labor leaders said the "open shop" was not the question involved, but the "right of men to organize."

Judge Gary disputed this, asserting that the A. F. of L. was seeking to force the "closed shop" on the steel industry.

More Steel Mills Reopen; Strikers Close Only One in Pittsburgh District

By International News Service.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 2.—The steel strike pursued the slow, even tenor of its way here today with the eyes of its principals centred on Washington, where Senator Kenyon's investigating committee continues to hold the spotlight.

Progress was claimed by the operators—the slow, methodical progress which told of more men entering the mills here and there, additional works being put in operation and a slow rise in the production of the finished material.

No big gains have been made by the companies. On the other hand, the strikers have hardly made any. They are sitting a little of more into the organization, but not in such numbers as to affect the outcome of the struggle either way.

The fact was pointed out here today that the strikers have succeeded in closing only one factory since the day after the strike was called—the plant at Weirton, W. Va. The operators have succeeded in reopening more than a dozen in the district alone in the same span of time.

One of the far reaching results of the strike in this district particularly, has been to cause a considerable total of foreign workers to quit the industry and quit the United States. Constant streams of alien workers, their families and their goods are passing daily through the railroad stations of the mill towns, bound for the seacoast and the homeland.

This has been occasioned by a natural desire to return to Europe. It is said, hastened by the tidy sum of war savings and the marked unrest and sporadic outbreaks of violence in various parts of the country. They figure apparently that now is a good time to go, and they are going in large numbers.

As some places in the Pittsburgh district only American workers are now employed. The old signs, such as "Workers wanted, Lithuanians and Croatians preferred," have disappeared, and in their places now appears "Only Americans wanted."

This has been brought about largely by the fact that, generally speaking, this is a foreign labor strike in this district. Some companies are even naturalizing their foreign employes who remain.

WOMAN DIES UNDER INFLUENCE OF ETHER

Providence, R. I., Oct. 2.—Taking ether in order to have a tooth extracted, Mrs. Anna I. Prendergast died suddenly while under its influence at her home here.

Medical Examiner Wilcox gave paralysis of the heart as the cause. Mrs. Prendergast arranged with Dr. Edward L. Lynaugh to have the tooth extracted. Dr. Thomas J. Daley, while giving the anesthetic, noted the irregular action of the woman's heart. He called in Dr. Edgar Potter, and when both physicians failed to restore Mrs. Prendergast to consciousness, a pulmotor was used without effect.

ORDER WEBSTER JAMAICA GINGER SALES REDUCED

Webster, Oct. 2.—Webster druggists have been notified to reduce the sales of Jamaica ginger and other alcoholic extracts. This is because "jakey" jags were discussed at the weekly meeting of the selectmen. The board received some unsigned complaints from wives of men with a taste for the 90 per cent. stuff. Heretofore, according to the town fathers, it must be sold for legitimate purposes.

HARVARD ENDOWMENT FUND IN BOSTON NOW TOTALS $791,000

17 GIVE $25,000 EACH

Total Throughout Country Believed to Be Well Above $2,000,000

Additional donations from the Boston district to the Harvard Endowment Fund brought the grand total for the first day up to $791,000, according to a statement issued today.

With the bulk of returns yet to be made by team captains and members, five depositories reported twenty-two additional gifts amounting to $21,000.

One subscription reported through the team captains was for $25,000, making seventeen gifts of this amount to date. It was also announced at the fund headquarters, No. 95 Milk street, that scores of donations received yesterday by canvassing team members had not been reported to the depositories, the canvassers being unwilling to take time off from their visits to Harvard alumni in the desire to record as large totals as possible for the day.

Robert H. Gardiner, Jr., chairman of the general canvass committee, expressed himself as confident that the first days figures for the teams would pass the $10,000 mark. This total would send the fund to date well over the $2,000,000 for the country, even without reports in addition to those made yesterday.

In the few totals recorded by the depositories yesterday, the group comprising lawyers, accountants and agriculturalists led in the thirty-four cities with $28,361. The group comprising manufacturers, engineers and financiers totalled $6,730.

The local fund directors, while enthused over the large total of voluntary gifts, are pushing out to their team members that the great task of reaching the desired goal of $5,000,000 for the Boston district is just begun and that many gifts must be recorded to make up the $4,200,000 remaining and reach the 100 per cent. mark in subscriptions.

Boston Harvard men hope to have a large percentage of $5,000,00 to report next Wednesday at a big "Progress Meeting," which will be held at the Harvard Club of New York, where all chairmen will report the total subscriptions in their respective territories.

"Reports from Harvard Endowment Fund committees from all over the country are very encouraging," Eliot Wadsworth of New York, chairman of the executive committee of the fund committee, said at Boston headquarters today. "The next report date is Wednesday, October 8, when the progress meeting will be held in New York. It is hoped that we will then see the campaign well on its way to a successful conclusion."

ACCUSES CURTIS AND COOLIDGE OF 'SCHEME'

Used Police Situation for Political Preferment, Says Councillor Sullivan

Governor Coolidge and Police Commissioner Curtis were charged with criminal negligence in leaving Boston unprotected the night of September 9 and with using the police situation to obtain political preferment by Lewis R. Sullivan of the Governor's Council today.

Mr. Sullivan also attacked Herbert Parker as an enemy of organized labor, and claimed that he acted illegally as counsel for the police commissioner. He also charged that he was investigating the police situation and in a short time would make public what he called "the real story of what happened."

At yesterday's meeting of the Governor's Council Mr. Sullivan offered an amendment to the revision of civil service requirements for police applicants, which the Attorney-General declared would do the basis of the Civil Service Commission if adopted.

WILL REJECT AMENDMENT.

Today it was stated at the Governor's office that this amendment would not be adopted.

Councillor Sullivan's statement was in part as follows:

"I intend to find out what compensation Herbert Parker has been and is receiving from the Police Commissioner Curtis as agent of the City of Boston, for legal services in connection with the striking policemen.

"I want to find out why it is that Police Commissioner Curtis is unable to the City of Boston for the expenditures of his office, does not call in the attorney general, but the Governor's Counsel when questions affecting the interests of the city are at stake, instead of a rank outsider, as prescribed by the city regulations.

CHARGES PARKER WITH SPITE.

"At the proper time I will produce evidence to show that Herbert Parker, as a member of the Constitutional Convention, went on record as opposed to organized labor and that he injected his spite and personal opinions when the opportunity was presented by his friend, Police Commissioner Curtis in the present police situation.

"I will show that he advised his self-made chief that he should not and was not to speak to the 'common soldier' only on matters dealing with army regulations.

"I will also show that Governor Coolidge and Police Commissioner Curtis went through unauthorized channels, using the police situation as a vehicle on which to ride into office for political preferment.

PUTS IT UP TO CONFERENCE.

"As a representative of the citizens of Boston in the Governor's Council I have placed before him the question as to I say these striking policemen ought to be reinstated at once and to allow the $100 bonus, which means up to Washington October 6, to decide their status as members of the American Federation of Labor.

"I am in constant touch with the great masses of the people in Boston, amounting to about two-thirds of Police Commissioner Curtis' and am now know they feel in the present situation. There are two sides to this case, the public has had only one. Before I get through they will know the other side.

WILL PLACE THE BLAME.

"Every woman in Boston who suffered indignities at the hands of the night the police went on strike, will know who to blame when I get through with my investigation. Every person whose property was stolen or damaged on the evening of September 9, can hold the city of Boston responsible. I am informed that Commissioner Curtis in not having any guns covered.

"I will show from affidavits by reputable persons that the city was left unprotected by the police that night although the members of the State Guard were authorized that night to arrest rioters."

Ten new candidates for the police force reported today for examinations.

Found! A landlord who hasn't raised his rents in eight years!

He doesn't profiteer, and he doesn't want to profiteer.

He hasn't raised his rents, and he isn't going to, what's more.

He makes a good profit on his houses, charging the same rent that he did eight years ago. He says, "Oh, what's the use? Use a tenant decently, and he will use you the same.

"A little golden rule makes both parties to a bargain feel better. And, in this landlord business, it pays, as well. I recommend it to those house owners who have never tried it."

Now the model landlord is William R. Hand of No. 5 St. Williams street, and the houses he owns are in Dorchester. Eight years ago he bought them. The rent then is the same rent now. But you should hear Mr. Hand tell the story himself.

INCREASE IN TAXES.

"I own twenty-four flats and three-suite houses in one of the most populous and expensive suburbs of the city," he said. "In the eight years I have owned them taxes have gone up $9 a $1,000. The high cost of painting and plumbing and carpentry is the same story, still high, as we all know. To illustrate another increase in prices, just take awnings. Today I received a bill for taking down and putting up awnings. It used to cost $2.50 to care for these by the season. Now it costs $6, nearly double.

"Yet, despite all the increases, house renting still pays, and house renting, at the old rate charged before the inflation of prices, still yields a much bigger return than savings bank deposits. They yield bigger returns than telephone stock, which pays 6½ per cent. Therefore, since I can do so, why should I raise rents of persons who are already suffering from the high cost of food and clothing? It seems to me far better to be content with a smaller, though at the same time, a decent rate of interest."

GETS EVERY CENT DUE.

But all this fair dealing is not on one side. For Hand's tenants have risen up and called him blessed. This is the way they did it.

"When I went today to collect my rents," Hand confesses, "I got every dollar that was due me. Every tenant had his money ready. That is the way it is all the time. Then too, today, not one woman asked for repairs. I might have raised my rents, and with exacting tenants, have spent it all and more out again on repairs."

Which ends the story with a prophecy. "Unless prices go up very much more than they have gone up yet, my rents will still continue as they were eight years ago."

No wonder that with such a landlord the Hand apartments are never empty.

BOSTON FISHING BOATS ARE GOING TO NEW YORK

It is acknowledged by officials of the Bay State Fishing Company that the steam trawler Spray, now on the fishing banks, would discharge its cargo of fish in New York. This acknowledgment strengthened the belief among fishing interests that Boston is to lose, perhaps permanently, a large part of its fishing fleet.

It is known that the trawler Ocean is discharging 125,000 pounds of fresh fish in New York, a cargo which ordinarily would come to Boston.

Cry of "Macaroni" Nearly Results in Lynching

By Universal Service.

Berne, Oct. 2—A new international incident on a Berlin street which came close to resulting in a murder like that of the French Sergeant Mannheim, is reported from the German capital.

Two policemen rescued them in a machine which was bombarded with bricks and bottles as it dashed away.

FIRST NATIONAL BUYS HANCOCK BUILDING

Adds to Area for Erection of New Bank Structure in Business Centre

In line with its policy of acquiring a big area for the erection of a new bank building, the First National Bank has bought the old John Hancock Building, with entrances at Nos. 176-178 Devonshire street and No. 25 Federal street.

The property consists of a nine-story building and 12,400 square feet of land. It is assessed for $1,140,000.

The sale was made by the trustees of the Park Square Real Estate Trust, which has held the property for some time. W. J. McDonald, Mack Temple Dowling and J. Sumner Draper represented the trustees, and Herbert E. Winslow acted for the purchaser.

This was the second big purchase of real estate made by the First National in the Devonshire street section recently, the other being that of the Equitable Building and the Master Builders' Building. The bank now owns all the property between Devonshire and Federal streets extending from Milk street as far as the new John Hancock Building.

The old John Hancock Building was built by George C. Richardson shortly after the Boston fire of 1872. It was later reconstructed for the John Hancock company, which still has offices there. The Hancock people will soon begin a new building in the Park square district.

The project of the First National calls for one of the finest bank buildings in New England. Such a building will make possible an arcade running through from Milk to Franklin street.

Claim Boy Admits Stealing 100 Bicycles

Confessing, the police say, to the theft of 100 or more bicycles which he has sold in Boston for five and six dollars apiece, Robert F. Silvey, a fifteen-year-old boy, is held by the Medford officers.

He is believed to be connected with bicycle thefts in Somerville, Cambridge Medford, Malden and Winchester.

The lad was captured near the Brooks School, High street, West Medford, by using a "decoy" bicycle. Plain clothes men took him into custody after observing his manoeuverings near the wheel.

Later, to Lieutenant Daniel W. Connors, he admitted, it is alleged, his complicity in the stealing of bicycles by the wholesale in Medford and other communities.

Silvey has served time in Rainsford Island Detention School and is now out of that institution on probation, the police say.

HEARS ACTION AGAINST UNION

Lunch Company Complains Local No. 34 Interferes With Conduct of Business

Judge Pierce of the Supreme Court is today hearing the merits of the controversy between the Walton Lunch Company and the Hotel and Restaurant Union, Local No. 34 of Boston, which the plaintiff asks to have enjoined from interfering with its business.

Primarily the trouble arose over a proposition made by the union to Mr. Walton, as to hours of labor, wages and a closed shop. The union says that Mr. Walton agreed to give a definite answer but failed to do so.

The union men left the employment of the Walton Lunch Company at the several places maintained by the company, and non-union men have since been hired. Efforts to induce present employes to join the union are among the acts complained of by the Walton Lunch Company.

On September 13, because of the strike of Boston policemen, the members of the union voluntarily agreed that they would not further picket premises occupied by the company.

Parishioners of the Rev. Nathan E. Wood, D. D., the retiring pastor of the First Baptist Church, Arlington, have presented him a purse of $1,000. The presentation was made by Deacon Harry T. Gregory.

Pershing Can Wear British Sword in Society

Washington, Oct. 2—The sword which General Pershing is to receive from England will not have to be sent to the archives of the State Department or be placed in a museum, as is the custom with gifts made to American officers and officials by foreign governments or people.

There was some discussion about the gifts among army officers arising over a churlish suggestion from abroad that when Pershing got the sword he would not be allowed to wear it. On the contrary the matter was settled long ago by the army regulations.

General Pershing, by the regulations, can wear the sword at all social and public affairs and everywhere in fact except when he is discharging a military function. Then he will wear his American sword.

"What about the New Light Six Cylinder Car to be Built by the Willys Corporation?"

The public offering of the preferred stock of the Willys Corporation has caused thousands of inquiries from the automobile buying public, automobile dealers and others in regard to the new car which the new Willys Corporation will build in its recently acquired Duesenberg plant, at Elizabeth, N. J. The Company is not just at present ready to make a complete announcement of the new car, but this much can be said about it:

OUT of an experience embracing the manufacturing and sale of over 650,000 automobiles, John N. Willys saw the great need of an absolutely new type of car to fill a vast and unoccupied field.

Experience has proved the efficiency for automobile purposes of the six cylinder unit motor. Engineering and manufacturing restrictions have placed a price upon six cylinder cars which have denied them to thousands of people. Expense of upkeep has placed a further barrier against popular ownership.

New principles of construction and new achievements in manufacturing have now overcome these obstacles.

The new car will make ownership of an attractive, efficient Six a reality to many thousands of families and individuals.

The New Six has demonstrated its efficiency, economy and slow depreciation. For more than two years the mechanical details of this car have been proved out under exacting and grilling road test conditions, covering over 200,000 miles and embracing all manners of loads, roadbeds and weathers.

The weight of the car is approximately 2,100 pounds—which, with new efficiency of the engine, produce outstanding economies of gasoline, oil and tires. On repeated and continuous tests it has maintained from 17 to 20 miles per gallon of gasoline.

A new principle of spring suspension gives the new Six the riding ease of a car with 142 inch wheel base—while the actual wheel base is only 112 inches.

The new spring suspension also prevents side swaying and enables the wheels to "hug the road bed"—a great factor for safety and easy riding. These easy riding, easy handling qualities will also greatly prolong the usefulness of the new car and reduce upkeep.

Advanced principles of construction, here only hinted at, effect many economies of manufacture. Production in great quantities will further reduce cost of manufacture of this economic light weight Six.

In addition to the manufacture of the new Six, the Willys Corporation embraces the Electric Auto-Lite business, including the Willys Light farm and house lighting business and the New Process Gear business.

The Electric Auto-Lite is, in itself, one of the great industries of the country. The plant is at Toledo, O. It builds electric starting and lighting systems. More than 1,400,000 sets have been sold. Orders and specifications are on hand for 4,000 outfits per day. The size of the field occupied by the Willys Light farm and country home electric lighting systems, operated by the Willys Knight motor, may be indicated by the fact that more than 20,000 of these units were ordered during the month of August alone. The FIAT plant at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is utilized by the Auto-Lite unit of the company.

The New Process Gear business is another great industry, occupying a large plant at Syracuse, N. Y. Many types of gears for automobile transmission and differentials are manufactured. The corporation is one of the largest manufacturers of gears in the country.

All of these plants are sources of supplies for the new car production.

The Duesenberg plant at Elizabeth, N. J., is one of the best equipped motor manufacturing plants in the country and was greatly enlarged for the production of motors for war purposes. The plant is being enlarged to many times its former capacity to meet needs of production in quantities of the New Six.

Anyone desiring further information about the plans and the new car program of the Willys Corporation should write for our booklet.

GIRLS SHOWER FLOWERS ON B.U. 'PROFS'

Amorous Notes Accompany Gifts from Freshmen Undergoing Initiation

Valentine's Day is a long way past and still a long way off, but that does not prevent college girls from sending sentimental notes to their favorite "profs."

An American reporter saw some samples of the billets-doux given to various professors at Boston University by amorous freshman girls of the College of Liberal Arts.

But don't blame the freshmen for such indiscreet acts. Blame the sophomores, who issued the order.

Livy isn't such a bad Latin course as it sounds, or else Professor Donald Cameron makes it interesting, for he was presented with more than a dozen buttonhole bouquets. Other professors, recipients of half a dozen or more flowers from freshmen, included Professor Joseph R. Taylor of the Greek and drama departments; Professor Warren O. Ault, history department; Professor William Goodwin Aurelio, German and Greek departments.

It is a great temptation to give the names of the young ladies who wrote the following bits of verse, but what girl with a "crush" on a certain "prof" wishes that fact divulged?

This bit of originality was accompanied by an asterisk:

"There is a maid in your class,
Who loves you for a master (teacher)
The only reason you can't have her
Is because you haven't asterisk (asked her)."

Another freshman girl was reserved in her expression of sentiment:

"This pink I do give
To thee, dear professor,
With thoughts of Gamma Delta
And with pleasant wishes for you."

Gamma Delta is the girls' society at the College of Liberal Arts under whose auspices the initiation stunts are being held.

"Sirrah" is the prettiest, here's to the wittiest,
Here's to the truest of all who are true,
Here's to the neatest one, here's to the sweetest one,
Here's to them all in one,
Here's to you."

Short and sweet was the line of sentiment written by some romantic girl with an aesthetic taste:

"Lovers do not plead with jewels,
Flowers alone can plead for them."

MATTAPAN BOY LOSES LEG UNDER TRAIN

Northern Lights In Brilliant Display. Over Boston

Contrasting sharply with the dark sky, the Northern Lights, seen clearly for miles by Greater Boston residents, attracted considerable attention in their first visit here in months. The lights, giving the impression of a giant calcium arc as they flashed across the heavens, were startling in their effect and could be seen for miles.

Questioned at the Harvard Observatory, the director said there was no scientific reason for their appearance, pointing out that it was the general belief that they are due to electrical action in the upper air. He said that the appearance of the lights was not a forecast of cold weather, but, on the contrary, usually preceded hot weather.

Its principal features will be: Provision for some sort of supervision by the interstate commerce commission over new capital issues; regulations governing the joint use of terminals; permission for pools into effect at the Boston City It can be demonstrated that such mergers will be in the interest of the shippers and, public, and authorization for the fixing of minimum rates by the interstate commerce commission.

BOSTON MOVIE HOUSES FREE OF MASHERS

Men and Women in Social Work Rush to Deny Statement of H. B. Heywood

Boston movies are as safe for young girls and women as mother's own parlor, according to Boston authorities in a position to judge of their atmosphere.

This opinion was vouched to the American, as a comment on a statement by H. B. Heywood, recently tried in New London on the charge of annoying Mrs. Eva Turner, wife of Lieutenant George Turner, in command of an eagle boat in New London Harbor.

Mrs. Turner, supported by her husband, had Heywood arrested for annoying her at a New London theatre. Heywood, while denying the charge for which he was fined $50, said he came from Boston and that the custom of paying such attentions to women in Boston movie houses was frequent and even acceptable to the women.

SLANDER ON THE CITY.

"There is not a shred of truth in such a charge," declared Mrs. J. W. Brackett, president of the Film Club. "It is a slander to our city and utterly ridiculous."

"Boston women are too aggressive in the protection of their integrity to permit such a state of affairs," declared J. Frank Chase of the Watch and Ward Society.

"A nice woman hardly ever insulted at a moving picture house or anywhere," says Commandant Annie Eastwood of the Salvation Army. "In the rare cases where she is so insulted she should act as did Mrs. Turner. To have the offender arrested is to protect other women."

"I have never seen anything of this sort," Miss Ethel Renelle of the amusement committee of Elizabeth Peabody House told the American. "The charge seems untrue to me."

FINDS EVERYTHING O. K.

Mrs. Brackett of the Film Club, began the discussion. "As a clubwoman, and a member of the Film Club," said she, "I have been in convhouses, in all parts of the city, for many years. In all those years I have never had anything objectionable happen to me. I have never seen anything out of the way happen to any other woman."

J. Frank Chase added that the Watch and Ward Society received all manner of letters and complaints, which are investigated. "But," he added, "we have never had such a complaint come in to us in regard to Boston women and Boston moving picture places."

Dowling Had Chance to Amass Fortune; Left $10,000

New York, Oct. 2.—Friends of the late Frank L. Dowling, twenty-seven years an alderman and one year president of the Borough of Manhattan, are today pointing to him as a remarkable example of integrity. In a position to amass wealth, he died poor, his whole estate consisting of $10,000 in Liberty Bonds, patriotism inducing him to subscribe all his savings to the Liberty Loans.

For twenty-seven years he served the city for $1,000 a year, and his one brief year of the presidency at $7,500 did not enable him to satisfy his sole ambition—to purchase a home for his wife and year-old child.

LAWRENCE GAS RATE INCREASED TO $1.25

Lawrence Gas Light Company was authorized today to increase its rate from $1.15 to $1.25 a thousand cubic feet, effective October 1, by the Massachusetts Gas and Electric Light Commission. The commission declared advances in operating costs, including increases in wages, justified the higher rate. It is the second increase allowed the company since April of last year, when the rate was 95 cents.

O'CONNELL LEGION POST PLANS DRILL AND DANCE

Michael J. O'Connell Post No. 78, American Legion, of Jamaica Plain, has completed plans for its first entertainment and dance November 10 at the West Roxbury High School. A prize drill will be a feature. Among those invited are Congressman Tinkham, United States Senator Walsh, Major-General Edwards, Major-General McCain, Colonel Shaw, Admirals Dunn and Robinson, and other civil and military officials.

WHOLESALE COBBLERS DEMAND MORE PAY

The United Shoe Repairers of America, with a membership of 300, represented in each of the big wholesale repairing houses of the city with from twelve to thirty men, have presented demands to the wholesalers requesting a forty-four-hour week and an increase of 20 per cent in wages. The demands were presented today and the employers have until Saturday to make their decision. At present the shoe repairers are working forty-eight and one-half hours a week for an average wage of $29.

COL. MEYER IN CHARGE OF ARMY RECREATION

Colonel Oren B. Meyer, formerly debarkation office and then temporary chief of staff at army headquarters, was today appointed educational and recreational officer in this district.

In outlining his policy, Colonel Meyer said: "The War Department by this policy does not intend to supplant the work of the welfare associations now doing work but will aim to co-operate with them."

FIGHT FOR BABY GERAGHTY ON SATURDAY

"Handsome Jack" Gets Contest Put Ahead of Wife's Divorce Action

Providence, Oct. 2.—"Handsome Jack" Geraghty, Boston automobile salesman, will begin his fight to wrest the custody of Jack, Jr., from his wife, Julia Francis Geraghty, in Providence County Superior Court Saturday.

In his petition the former chauffeur alleges that his society wife, New York and Newport favorite, is an "unfit person" to rear their son.

Geraghty has also filed a motion demanding that Mrs. Geraghty provide him with a bill of particulars in the divorce suit which she has brought and in which she alleged "extreme cruelty."

The end of the French-Geraghty romance, which delighted society some years ago, promises to be even more spectacular than the beginning.

Geraghty and his wife are expected to be in court, as well as the little boy, now in Newport.

John J. Fitzgerald will represent Geraghty and Stephen J. Casey will appear for the wife.

Geraghty is considered to have stolen a march on his wife by having the hearing on the custody of the child before her application for divorce is heard.

The fight for the custody of baby Jack is expected to rival in interest the divorce proceedings.

"CARRY ON"!

If Constipated, Bilious or Headachy, take "Cascarets"

Feel grand! Be efficient! Don't stay sick, bilious, headachy, constipated. Remove the liver and bowel poison which is keeping your head dizzy, your tongue coated, your breath bad and your stomach sour. Why not get a small box of Cascarets and enjoy the nicest, gentlest laxative-cathartic you ever experienced? Cascarets never gripe, sicken or inconvenience one like Salts, Oil, Calomel or harsh pills. Cascarets bring sunshine to cloudy minds and half-sick bodies. They work while you sleep.—Advertisement.

'FIGHT FOR ALL YOU CAN STEAL,' SAYS LAWSON

Defendant at Election Hearing Tells Lawyer He'll Make Him Look Like Hottentot.

George H. Lawson, independent Ward 12, Roxbury, furnished all the zest at a hearing before the Ballot Law Commission today when he appeared to answer charges that eight signatures on his papers were forged.

"This is a fight for a $1,500 job and all you can steal," he exclaimed when called upon to present his side of the case.

Attorney Herbert Kenney interrupted his Biblo to protest to the chairman against the statement.

"I'll make you look like a Hottentot," he said, pointing his finger at Kenney, who represents Representative Daniel J. Gillen, who made the charges. Gillen defeated Lawson for the nomination.

Lawson explained the absence of his witnesses by saying:

"Some of the men who worked for me live near the Tammany Club and are afraid to come here to testify. They have been intimidated. But I can bring others who will testify that the names on my papers have been legally procured."

THE DEAF HEAR

Mr. Frank W. Broad has resided at 303 Dudley St., Boston, for the past 54 years. is employed with S. L. Blanchard, at Washington square, Brookline. He said to the writer: "I had been deaf in my right ear two years, and had roaring noises that were extremely annoying. I had tried various remedies without success. While relating to an acquaintance the disadvantages of being deaf, I was informed that the place to have my trouble remedied was at the office of the Osmo-Chemic physician. I applied to the Osmo-Chemic physician for aid and these skillful physicians effectually removed both the noises and the deafness, and at a slight return for the service I am passing the word along so that others hopelessly deaf may take advantage of my experience and have their hearing restored."

DRAIN MILL PONDS IN HUNT FOR ADAMS WOMAN

Adams, Oct. 2.—In an effort to locate Mrs. Lena Bianchi, an aged woman who escaped from Plunkett Memorial Hospital, water in the raceways of the Berkshire mills and the L. L. Brown Paper Company ponds, has been drawn off. Mrs. Bianchi, who on several occasions recently threatened to commit suicide, is believed to have ended her life, and the nearby woods are also being searched.

A year ago the Bianchi family, consisting of the parents and five children, was stricken with influenza. All recovered, but since that time Mrs. Bianchi has been in poor health.

SUIT GROWS OUT OF CONTRACT FOR SHELLS

The suit for alleged breach of contract brought by the Chapman Manufacturing Company of Winchester against the American Can Company of New York has been removed to the Federal Court from the Superior Court of Middlesex County. The suit grew out of a contract for the manufacture of adapters for 75-mm. French H. E. shells.

It is contended by the plaintiff that they delivered 61,360 adapters under one contract and 151,680 under a second, and that they lost $162,000 by the failure of the defendant to complete the contract.

VON TIRPITZ' BOOK PROVES GERMANS GUILTY, SAYS CONAN DOYLE

Declares Teuton Admiral Reveals Real Causes of Great War

VON TIRPITZ AND HIS BOOK.

By Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

I presume that such books as the Tirpitz Memoirs are written for purely German consumption, or if not, it shows once more how completely Germany underrates the intelligence of the rest of the world.

Is there anyone in Europe, outside Germany, who could believe that this world cataclysm was caused by British jealousy of German trade—a jealousy which showed itself by throwing the whole British empire open to that trade upon equal terms with our own?

I should have thought an intelligent German child would have got past that point before now. But even while admitting that they have been lied to from the beginning, their public seems just as ready to absorb lies as ever. Some of von Tirpitz's statements, forth to the German, was not prepared for war, are surely too absurd to discuss. Amid a great cloud of words, no attempt is made to explain the two vital points:

1—Why did Germany allow her confederate to take an attitude towards Serbia which refused all compromise, and could only end in war?

2—Why did Germany invade Belgium, which she had sworn to protect, and how could she expect Britain to be dishonored forever by acquiescence in such villainy?

TO ATTACK BRITAIN.

It is as clear as the sun that in this latter action, coupled with the natural fear that the further despoiling of France would be the prelude to an attack upon the British Empire (as we were assured by countless German orators and journals), lay the true cause of that wonderful spontaneous rising of our people, which finally carried us to complete victory.

Let them wrangle between themselves whether it was the unscrupulous admiral or the unscrupulous statesman who is responsible for the shattered fleet and the ruined empire. Both have the guilt, and both the punishment.

SETTING UP EXCUSES.

We need not ask why he has decided to write and publish his own particular account of the circumstances which more or less immediately preceded, and of the proceedings which led up to, the greatest catastrophe known to history. After every important war the generals and the admirals whose side has been defeated—all with one consent begin to make excuses, and with equal unanimity to cast the blame for failure on the politicians.

Grand Admiral von Tirpitz has another excellent besides that of telling the world that the defeat of the German fleet, and consequently of Germany, was not his fault, but the fault of those malignant beings—the politicians. He was, according to his own account, the prime mover in the great expansion of the German navy in the last years of the nineteenth century and the early years of the twentieth. Indeed, he tells us plainly that, if it had been left to him, the expansion would have been greater than it was.

WHY FLEET EXPANDED.

He is, therefore, concerned to assert that this policy of his was not the cause of British suspicions of Germany's attitude and of the eventual cooling of friendly relations. According to him, these had nothing to do with the rise of a great German naval power, they were really due to British "trade jealousy."

This view has recently been put forward by Prince Henry of Prussia, who, as shown by the Grand Admiral's narrative, belonged to what may be called the Tirpitz circle. The imperial Chancellor did not agree with this, but insisted on seeing the provocation to the British Empire involved in repeated expansions of the German fleet.

IN FORM OF A CHALLENGE.

Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, strangely enough, omits to mention that the provocation was deliberately couched in the form of a challenge. With due official formality the Reichstag and the nation were told—as a justification of a fresh shipbuilding program — that Germany must have a fleet so large that even the greatest naval power in the world would hesitate before deciding to try conclusions with it. So, the Grand Admiral goes on to lament that his proposals for still further strengthening his country's fleet were repeatedly obstructed by the political administration.

It is startling, but nevertheless it is a fact, that he himself gives us good reason for suspecting that the Chancellor and his civilian colleagues did not believe in the grand admiral's single-mindedness with respect to an increase of Germany's naval strength. He says "that he would have given up the whole supplementary bill, as he had already told the Kaiser, in exchange for a really solid agreement of neutrality."

WANTED NEUTRALITY PLEDGE.

Readers are specially urged to note this remarkable admission. It is the most startling, but it is only one of several disclosures which ooze out between the lines of the Tirpitz statement—especially in that part of it which deals with the Haldane mission —of Germany's deliberate preparations for the war which was eventually to devastate the world.

The Tirpitz circle and the politicians were in complete agreement on one point, which—in view of which they were contemplating—they regarded as of the utmost importance. That was, to get the British government to bind itself to remain neutral when the war for which preparations were being made should begin. Sometimes what was demanded of us was plainly called neutrality; sometimes it was referred to as "the political agreement."

The readiness with which Admirals who have held exalted positions give themselves away, and, what is more, give other people away when they have recourse to publication, is impressive.

BLAMES "POLITICIANS."

When we reach that part of the statement which treats of the period of the war we ought to remember that it has been published at a date much later than that of any of the occurrences with which it deals. There are not wanting signs that most of the statement is inspired by the wisdom that comes after the event.

Even then, it is not very clear. From one passage we may derive the impression that Grand Admiral von Tirpitz' plan of operations imposed on the German fleet the assumption of an early and vigorous offensive, and that this plan was negatived by the "politicians." It is, however, possible to read into the statement a determination to wait for the occupation of the Flanders coast. The Tirpitz conception of naval warfare attached great importance to the latter.

ATTACK MILITARY HEADS.

The Grand Admiral loses patience with the German military authorities for not postponing the advance on Paris till Calais at least had been secured. This would, he suggests, have cut the communication between England and France. He takes no note of the fact that the possibility of this had been foreseen and provided for in England, the base on the French coast having been temporarily shifted to a point more to the westward.

From what he says about the establishment of a naval base at Tsingtau (Kiao-chao), it can only be inferred that he altogether misunderstood the attitude of Japan as to German procedure at that place. It was certain that Japan would never tolerate the permanent occupation of it by Germany as a fortified port. The Grand Admiral claims that the selection of Tsing-tau was made by himself. This raises two alternative questions, both of the highest importance.

POOR PLACE FOR NEUTRALITY.

Was his conception of the true doctrine of war such that he could look upon the choice of a place, so much "in the air" as sound? Not only was Tsingtau some thousands of miles from any German territory from which it could receive effective support; it was also but a few hundred miles distant from a country holding a recognized position among first-class naval powers, to which country the presence of the Germans at Tsing-tau was utterly distasteful.

The other question to be asked is—Germans at Tsing-tau was utterly Will he endeavor to justify the apparently inept choice of isolated Tsing-tau as naval base by connecting it with the efforts made to secure British neutrality? The lines of communication with that place were flanked at many points by British and French territory. The latter was, of course, to be regarded as eventually hostile.

How pleasant it would be if the former could be made for certain neutral! That accomplished, the French colonies were to be "mopped up" without difficulty. More than this, it would be even less difficult to annex the Dutch East Indies.

The readiness of Germany to make war on Holland is avowed clearly in the Tirpitz statement.

We can affirm without fear of refutation that the Dutch colonies were saved to Holland by the power of the British navy. The industriously prepared plan of Germany for dominating the world crops up over and over again in Grand Admiral von Tirpitz' statement. We can see clearly the close connection between that plan and the "Infamous proposal" made to us now more than five years ago.

Ban Court Toggery in Diplomatic Service of Germany

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND.

(Staff Correspondent of the Boston American.)

Special Cable Dispatch.

Berlin, Oct. 2.—Germany has broken another time-honored tradition of her imperial and military past. She has abolished all uniforms and court costumes in the diplomatic service in the new republic.

Not only are diplomats forbidden to wear diplomatic, but also military uniforms. In the past German diplomats and the secretaries attached to them have been nearly always officers of the reserve and therefore wore military uniforms. Now, it has been claimed, contributed to the impression abroad that Germany was essentially a militaristic country.

GNORED IN PAY RAISES, QUITS HEALTH BOARD

Lawrence, Oct. 2.—Dissatisfied because the City Council did not boost his salary when the other increases of city officials were made early in the week, Chairman Daniel J. Murphy of the local Board of Health, has tendered his resignation to Aldermen Robert S. Maloney to take effect at once.

He will continue to act as superintendent of sanitation as formerly. Mr. Murphy now receives $2,000 a year as superintendent of sanitation. He got an increase of $100 a year. The salary of the chairman of the health board is $200. Mr. Murphy declared that he was doing practically all the work of the board and that it was worth more than $300 if he was to stay on the job.

ALLIES LONG READY FOR WAR, SAYS VON TIRPITZ

PLANS FOR CONQUEST KNOWN AND APPROVED BY ENGLAND

VON TIRPITZ MEMOIRS

By ALFRED VON TIRPITZ,
Grand Admiral of the German Navy.

During the memorable week of the Kiel regatta, in June, 1914, our ambassador to London, Prince Lichnowsky, told me that Great Britain had decided to be satisfied with the way the German fleet was being expanded, despite its growing strength. A war between England and Germany, he went on to explain, was then out of the question, either through motives of naval jealousy or over foreign trade privileges. Our relations, in a word, with the English were satisfactory and a rapprochement was growing.

Then he asked me, purely as a matter of personal information, whether a big new naval budget was to be placed before the Reichstag. My reply was:

"We have no need of any more warships."

I judged that our fleet, which then was lying in an inspiring panoply in the waters about Kiel, was sufficient for all of Germany's needs at the time. In this same week at Kiel the battleship squadron of the British grand fleet was our guest for the first time in nineteen years as a symbol of our improved relations.

I had invited some English naval officers and the British ambassador to Berlin, Sir William E. Goschen, to luncheon on board my flagship when the news was received of the assassination at Sarajevo, on June 28, of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir apparent to the Austro-Hungarian throne. Two days later the English ships sailed away. On July 2, I went to take the cure, as I had planned long before.

That piece of news from Sarajevo had moved all of us in uncanny fashion. It was, of course, expected that some satisfaction would be required by Austria for the dark deed, and in consequence there was a certain tension throughout the whole of Europe. But I did not fear the possibility of a world war. Who was to take on the responsibility for such a thing? Moreover, our military intelligence reports showed that an attack on Germany by Russia was not to be expected, as the Russian armies could not be gotten into shape for a great movement before two years, if at all.

ENGLISH "STRAPPING."

Neither did I ever suspect that the assassination of the archduke had been contrived either with the connivance of the Czar of Russia or by English diplomacy. My daily reading of the English newspapers, together with official reports from London, had kept me in touch with the diminution of the English agitation against us, and the easing of the tension between England and Germany. The basic feeling by all England that we ought to be suppressed and not yet arrived and, and it could not be forgotten, for one moment, that it was still England's principle to hem in Germany's influence.

But the moment for striking us down was felt in wide circles in England to be passed. In 1897 the destruction of the German Empire, which then had no fleet, was discussed in cold blood by the ministry of Lord Salisbury. In 1905 the first lord of the British Admiralty openly threatened the still tiny German fleet with annihilation through an attack.

(Editor's Note—The Kurt of Selborne, of whom von Tirpitz speaks, made no direct threat against Germany. He did say, discussing the lessons learned in the Russo-Japanese war, that it was a necessity for England to have a good margin of naval strength, and that more battleships were needed to hold command of the sea. This was regarded in some quarters as a direct threat at Germany, but the view was indorsed by President Roosevelt, who republished Lord Selborne's remarks as an official naval document.)

In 1908-9 a navy scare, at least, accompanied the Bosnian crisis, after on October 7, 1908, Austria had declared her intention of absorbing Bosnia under her drastic interpretation of the Treaty of Berlin. Although there were no direct threats from England against us, and the English sword no longer was set so loosely in its scabbard, so that the English tone was no more arrogant and brutal, it was still very much excited. During the Agadir and the Haldane period in 1911 and 1912 certain self-controlled elements, and a sense of growing caution mingled in the Briton's hostile tone.

(Editor's Note—In August, 1911, Germany protested against the action of the French in sending a column of troops from Algeria to Fez, as "by a pretext for Moroccan conquest. The German cruiser Panther put in at the Moorish harbor of Agadir at once, and a clash was imminent. The Kaiser explained the Panther's cruise as a friendly visit, and the incident was closed.)

In 1912, at last, we defeated the final attempt to force upon Germany the hegemony of England as expressed in a proportion of two squadrons of the British navy for every one of Germany's. The British ministers soon afterward expressed themselves as well satisfied with our ratio of five to England's eight, and showed more respect to us in every way. In 1912-14 they encouraged our support of the Austrian standpoint in the Balkans, but it will not be necessary for me to discuss now far this emphasis upon Russo-German difference was felt to be desirable.

RUSSIA AND FRANCE READY.

In July, 1914, therefore, when it was seen that there was to be war, the English showed a desire at first, as I found out later, not to let loose a great world war on Serbia's account. This desire was actuated by several factors, one of the most important being the need for preserving the general peace, always strong in a commercial people. The English were at least for a general peace so long as their own interests were not endangered. It would be wrong to explain this attitude as one of friendship for Germany.

England was willing at all times, when she was unobserved, to reduce the German people to a condition of poverty in which they had been prior to the days of Bismarck and the achievements of the Hohenzollern family, from which condition they alone had raised us. Meanwhile the danger of a world-war was brought gradually, but steadily, nearer, through the strengthening of the power of Russia. Since Russia had joined the Entente and our Russian policy, which was wrong in many ways, had not succeeded in easing the tension between us, England had her grand chance.

Preparations for war on the part of both Russia and France had been advanced to the utmost limits. The fact that England favored these preparations, and knew all about the desire for conquest which was back of them, renders England's historical guilt irrefutably clear.

This was particularly so because England herself was much more cautious with us in consequence of the increased risk of a war with Germany, and was balanced in a measure by her cooler temperament. This served, however, to increase the explosive forces of the entente within the unstable European situation, which had been brought about by England herself.

PEACEFUL EXPANSION.

For our half-century of peaceful expansion had made it difficult for England to attack us. Both the cabinet and public opinion in England found it more and more to their own interests to let us take part in the business of the world as their best customers. While England became more accustomed to this idea, those Anglophiles in Germany withdrew into the background with their regard for England's predominance as a sort of divine right, and German power as something unusual and inadmissible.

Even those who heretofore had taken the line that England should not be "provoked" by a navy war of our own making, began to take heart in the Fatherland, which was respected and protected by its own strength in consequence of a more polite treatment of the German Empire. We had almost passed, in those days, the unavoidable "danger zone." The completion of the building plans of our high seas fleet, and the object having been reached of equalizing our rights with those of England, had nearly been attained.

England did not anticipate a naval attack from us. She had a guarantee against this in our unfavorable strategical position in a triangle of sea, which did not increase, but rather served to limit, the effectiveness of our fleet. These circumstances, together with our lack of strong naval allies, could not produce a desire for war in any responsible German.

GERMANY'S PLACE IN THE SUN.

There was another guarantee, too, in the proportion of eight English squadrons to five German in the two fleets, and which we had designed was our ultimate aim. This had been satisfied. Further, the Kaiser had a love for peace that was almost notorious. And, over and above everything else, there was the simple fact that our position in the world would gain by peace more than ever was imaginable in a most glorious war.

Trade and travel had increased in both countries by leaps and bounds. Military burdens were being borne with a lasting spirit, and had productive results in the fullest sense of the word. The real balance of power was appearing on the political horizon. Although the British statesmen, in conversation with the Germans, did not stress the fact, it was mainly the presence of our nearly completed fleet in the North Sea that had produced their prayerful tone that had lessened the probability of British attack. Of course, the British only spoke of their powerful armament as one of the facts which strengthened these inclinations.

But when the war came, the English were glad in the same sense as was a persistent American in our country, who said to me, after the outbreak of the conflict, that he could not understand our allowing it war to happen, for we should have outstripped England by peaceful means within a few years. Of course, the English could hardly have imagined in July, 1914, that our government would keep the German fleet from striking. They did not, therefore, think of the war at all light-heartedly.

STROKE OF GENIUS.

That stroke of genius—the policy of encirclement—which was to drive the noble quarry, Germany, to its death, was on the point of being broken by the growth of our power. So far, then, as I had honorably contributed to the preservation of the peace of the world by Germany, I looked back upon my life's work with satisfaction, and felt that the conclusion of the navy bill being not far off, I could lay my completed task in the hands of my successor, and he could stand at the helm in the petty war between the officials and the German Parliament.

I regarded that the German navy would have done its work well if it could save maintained, in the sense of what I had projected, peace and liberty upon the high seas.

Never before, at this red dawn, was Germany more powerful and more respected in the course of her long history, by the greatest ones of the earth, than in those days. Never had she thrived more richly. In the judgment of experienced men of affairs, such as the former Chancellor, Prince von Bueiow, for instance, we were to all intents and purposes "over the hill" and we had asserted our right to a place in the world.

German civilization and economy were making up in full measure, in Eastern Asia, Africa, South America and the Near East, for what our history had neglected to do. Just a few more years of calm and skilful leadership and we could not have been uprooted as a world power in the sense of Theodore Roosevelt's words, spoken in 1904: "The prosperity of a nation has not normally the significance of a threat, but of hope for other nations."

In his next installment, continuing his exposition of the causes of the war and its denouement from the standpoint of German "secret diplomacy," Admiral von Tirpitz shows how the Kaiser could have averted the war with the aid of the Czar of Russia, and blames mediocre politicians of Germany for causing hostilities, due to their "fatal self." He criticizes sparingly the "star chamber politics" of Germany under the Kaiser.

Germany Was Doomed If She Refused to Sign

By Universal Service.

Berlin, Oct. 2—What would have happened if Germany had not signed the treaty of Versailles?

The Vossische Zeitung claims to have obtained from Rome an authoritative answer to this question, namely, that the Allies had thoroughly agreed upon their action in that event. A new pact would have been submitted to Germany, the first article of which would have read:

"The German Empire has ceased to exist."

Thereupon, it is asserted, Germany would have been partitioned into separate states, and no reunion would have been possible without the consent of the Allies.

REUTHER MASTER OF WHITE SOX ALL THE WAY

By NICK FLATLEY.

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—Is 1914's world series tale to be repeated this torrid Fall? Are the Reds, cheek full of confidence, going to ride rough shod over the champion White Sox of the Ban Johnson circuit and hoist the National League to glory as the Braves did just five years ago?

Looks that way now. About everybody here thinks that as the two teams are ready to stage the second game. Torpedoing the Sox 2 to 1 and running away with the all important first game of the series has caused a wonderful change of feeling in the numberless baseball breasts that have been brought to this over-crowded village by their owners.

The Reds were such a confident bunch going into the series, shortenders even for their most ardent adherents that they just naturally couldn't figure defeat. Now that they have come through so ingeniously and worn off their nervousness that goes along with the opening day, they are going to be one mighty tough bunch to beat.

COULDN'T STIR REUTHER.

Everybody admits the White Sox have all the class, but they had it all in the opener, and it didn't make the slightest difference. They didn't have enough base hits to disturb the superb nonchalance of Walter Reuther, and nothing but a cement wall could have stopped the Reds' knocks that went whistling toward the outfield bleachers.

The Reds showed the world yesterday that they can thump good right handers, although it must be said that Cicotte didn't have the speed or the stuff that he has shown during the season. He has been troubled with a lame arm recently and White Sox rooters are worrying themselves bald headed about the wing. Edward says it feels all right, but then, if you remember, Alexander was in the same unhappy state when the Red Sox and Phillies had their clash.

KNOWS REDS NOW.

Gleason declares that Cicotte is O. K. and will be back in the game soon, and a lot of Eddie's friends were none too sanguine about that initial game. He has to know the enemy before he's really effective. He knows them now, so his surmise. So it may be a different story next time.

Be that as it may, the Reds have knocked off a good right hander and today were to get the southpaw brand of sharp shooting.

Patricius Moran, who has been unanimously elected honorary mayor out this way, had Selfridge Piner and Eller all ready to perform for him. His early pace was to the effect that he hadn't decided which to use.

Smashing through the Sox defence, which is principal, Cicotte, was a matter of sheer brute strength with the Reds. They had the utmost confidence in themselves, and Pat Moran had them all hypnotized into believing that they could hit anything. They waded into what Cicotte heaved at them, regardless, and the only wonder was that they didn't break through earlier than they did—the fourth chapter.

LOOKED REGULAR FOR AWHILE.

For a few minutes it looked like a real serious ball game. The Reds shot out in the first inning, when Cicotte showed that all was not as it should be by hesing Rath under the guns. Then the Sox checked back, only run in the second, mostly because Kopf was threatened with an assault and battery and hurled the ball into the grandstand.

But after the fourth the pastime was merely the ordinary finish of a one-sided game. Gleason and the Sox realized that defeat, totally unexpected, had come to them. Wilkinson and Loudermilk were sent to the hill after Cicotte and the both of them were lambasted severely. The Reds were hitting anything. Chaps like Neale and Daubert, who have been in a slump, rose gloriously to the occasion and hit everything hurled at them. Each clicked out three safe ones.

ROUSH STARS IN FIELD.

While Reuther was the star of the fray, there were several who helped on the long trail to triumph. For instance Eddie Roush, who wasn't hitting, made four captures of balls that would have been extra basers with almost any other gardner in the territory. Pat Duncan, the new rookie, chopped out a pair of safeties, and incidentally pulled the play that set the stage for Larry Kopf's inning surge and fireworks.

It was the break in the game, as Hughey F. and the other deep students would put it. It happened when Roush opened the Reds' fourth with a fly to Felsch, after which Duncan pushed a one shot to right centre. Kopf bland one toward the box that Cicotte snared. He threw to second to force Duncan. An easy double play was in sight but the Red was in front of Risberg, and he had to delay his throw just long enough to let Kopf beat it to first.

INTERFERENCE SAVED KOPF.

Duncan's interference positively saved Larry, and it wasn't the kind of blocking that would be censured for, finalled, either. It was just a sample of keen, heads up baseball by a youngster in the heat of one of the game. Neale followed that up with a hit through the box, and Wingo crashed the first ball pitched right for a run-scoring monoxack. The way, caught a whale of a beat, down both the Sox

to the picture in FOURTH stout-hearted

sleuth to left centre that was good for three bases and rescued two more runners. The ovation he got as he came into third was one of the noisiest ever heard at a World Series or anywhere else.

FANS HOWL WITH GLEE.

The Cincinnati bugs just howled their heads off for the matter of three or four minutes. Rath and Daubert beat up the fusilade and accounted for two more scores. Five in the inning, and all because Duncan knew his business.

REDS OUT AFTER ANOTHER WIN TODAY

The pavilion and bleacher seats filled up first and the centre field bleachers presented a mass of white shirts.

Cincinnati felt happy over the prospects of enjoying her first World's Series yesterday, but she was in an uproar of good humor today.

With the first game ticked safely away, Pat Moran's brave boys were certain of victory now. They admitted the possibility of defeat before, they drove Eddie Cicotte to the showers with an avalanche of hits, but take it from them, it's all over but the shouting.

REDS RULE FAVORITES.

The fans, too, were bulging with confidence, and betting on the Reds increased today, although even money was about the best that could be gotten. A few bets with odds favoring the Reds at 6 to 5 and 7 to 5 were reported.

George M. Cohan, who came here as a White Sox supporter and brought something like $25,000 to place on the Gleasonites, has been unable to get much of it up.

Otto Floto, one of the veterans of Kansas City, brought a big roll to bet, but found the Reds very cautious. Other sportsmen from all parts of the country, believing that they would be able to get odds on the Sox today, were disappointed.

NAT BUTLER BUILDING NEW SIX-LAP TRACK

Boston bike fans will be pleased with the news that a new six-lap track is to be built by the great and only Nat Butler, who knows the difference between a real bike race and an imitation.

The new track is to be erected on the spot where Wonderland once stood at Revere, and it is planned to make the park spacious enough to accommodate 15,000 fans, and the increased size of the racing path will mean greater speed displayed in the motor races than was seen on the eight-lap affair at the beach.

Work has already begun on the new track and will be ready when next season rolls around, and there'll be no disappointments in being turned away on account of the big crowds, as was the case last Summer.

WATTERS SHOWS PROMISE ON ANNAPOLIS ELEVEN

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 2.—Watters, who has played a speedy and brilliant game for the Naval Academy on the basket ball court and Lacrosse field, is doing good work as a halfback on the eleven this season. Coach Dobie is keeping an eye on him.

Several players, who did not get beyond the second quarter last season are developing this year." Among them are Cruise, Flood, Dole and Koehler, while Taylor and Newman are also doing well. Alford and Hawlings are doing the best work of the veterans.

Dreams Come True for Redland Fans

By DAMON RUNYON.

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—Dreams do come true! Little dreams and big dreams come to pass. However the scoffers may deny it.

Here on the banks of the old river this night is a whole city happy in the realization of a big dream; gloriously happy; hoarsely happy.

The Reds won the first game of the world series. The Reds beat the Chicago White Sox. The score was 9 to 1.

Be off with you sceptics, now! Be off with you! Cincinnati's dream came true! Let those who held there are brighter dreams than a dream of baseball greatness gaze upon and listen to this sturdy old Mid-Western town, to their confusion!

THE MERRY HOOT.

Didn't everybody say the dream was nonsense? Didn't everybody say the Reds couldn't possibly win? Experts, ball players and fans; didn't they all laugh at Cincinnati's baseball pretensions this year as they have every year for fifty years? Cincinnati will tell you they did. Didn't they tell you that Pat Moran's ball club was made up of the cast-offs, the leavings; in short, the off scourings of baseball; and that it was just a sort of a baseball joke as compared to the million-dollar club that represents Chicago?

OLD TERMS DESCRIBE.

Old fashioned baseball language is apt to be a bit extravagant. Yet old fashioned language which speaks casually of "slaughter" and "annihilation" with reference to one sided baseball defeats, best describes the realization of Cincinnati's dream.

We'll use the word "slaughter"; it was a baseball slaughter of Chicago's club. A baseball fan does not have to go beyond the score to know that. In the fourth inning, the Reds battered Eddie Cicotte, the star pitcher of the American League, for five runs. They drove him from the box. After that the White Sox were never in the hunt. You have seen better baseball games on the town lots. Only the fact that this game was the realization of a grand and magnificent dream lifts it above the very commonplace of baseball things. There have been very few games in the Fall series that have been called baseball's classic, half as lop-sided or half as tame.

TAME BASEBALL.

Tame from the standpoint of baseball, that is not tame from the standpoint of Cincinnati. Anything but tame for Cincinnati. It may have horrified the blase ball writers, sitting high up on the grandstand, and it may have been most distressingly weird and inartistic to the veteran baseball people, but it was a battle hectic and thrilling even to Cincinnati.

It was one of those games which in the run of baseball seasons would be styled "just a ball game," by the critics, a matter to be treated lightly, and as of no great consequence, but this was a world's series game, a game, on which hung the civic pride of two great American cities.

The score was tied 1 to 1 when the Reds went to bat in the fourth inning. They did their scoring with two outs.

And it seemed to us, as we sat watching the rise and spread of Cincinnati's madness, as we sat listening to the steady thuds of bats and to the roaring of the crowd that across the background passed a dark shadow of a great pitcher moving into that baseball oblivion where they all must go.

CICOTTE HAD NOTHING.

Cicotte "had nothing" as they put it in baseball language. The magic of the right arm that carried the Chicago club through to a pennant in the American League had vanished. The spell of the so-called "white ball" of which Cicotte is supposed to be master and which seemed to enthrall the batsmen of his own league was impotent before the Reds.

And while the veteran seemed to pass and go his way a youngster was coming on to claim his own—to assert his inalienable right to that heritage of sport which is the heritage of youth.

Walter Reuther a young left-hander from the West coast pitched against the thirty-five-year-old Cicotte and it was his first game in a World's Series, too. After one brief nervous flurry the youngster settled down and held the Sox safely.

If we were picking heroes in this first chapter of the World's Series of 1919, we might pick Reuther. Besides pitching with great skill, he hit a three-bagger into the crowd in centre field in that turbulent fourth and drove in two runs. He had great support. The Reds played with a rush and dash that must have surprised the White Sox. It was all the more surprising because in practice the Chicagoans seemed much faster. In the game, however, their work was drab and colorless as compared to the Reds. But that's always the way a baseball club seems behind poor pitching.

BLAME IS CICOTTE'S.

Cicotte can blame himself for some of the disaster of the fourth. He was very slow in making a play that would have ended the inning before any runs had been scored. Maybe it wouldn't have made much difference; however, it would have delayed the inevitable.

The Sox couldn't hit Reuther. The Reds could hit Cicotte. There's the story in a nutshell.

Now we'll drop completely into baseball vernacular and tell the story of that fourth inning.

Rousch is out on a fly to centre. Eddie Roush, the wide-ranging, hard-hitting outfield star of the National League. Pat Duncan, just "up from the sticks," as the ball players say, and, like Reuther, playing his part in World's Series game, singles smartly to centre.

Larry Kopf, the shortfielder who was once traded to Brooklyn and then refused to report there, practically forced Moran to keep him, hit a ball to Cicotte. It looked as if the pitcher had plenty of time to wheel and throw the ball to second and start a double play which would have ended the inning, but, instead, he waited that fatal few seconds that are often the difference between victory and defeat in baseball.

THROW TOO LATE.

He finally did make the throw to "Swede" Risberg but too late for Risberg to relay the ball on to Gandil and double Kopf. Neal followed with a single and a moment later Ivy Wingo, the red-headed Carolinian, who did great work behind the bat for the Reds today, stepped up and slashed a hit to right, scoring Kopf and putting Neale on third and himself on second on the throw. The slaughter was on and the crowd was in a veritable frenzy.

Now came Reuther, such a good batsman that he has often hit in the pinches for the Reds this past season, and smashed the ball into the centre field crowd, almost on a line. Neale and Wingo scored.

DEFEAT A TONIC FOR SOX, SAYS GLEASON

White Sox Manager Says That Breaks of the Game Were All Against His Team

By KID GLEASON.
Manager of the White Sox.

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—That awful beating the Reds gave the White Sox in the first game will do the Sox more good than anything that could have happened to them. My gang was just a bit too confident. That was the main trouble. They will not be confident now. They will be out there fighting in every game. Getting a trimming by such a big score was like a punch on the jaw to all of us, and you know a punch on the jaw makes a fellow fight.

If we had been licked by a score of 1 to 0 or 2 to 1 in a tough battle, I would be feeling worse than I am after the 9 to 1 beating. The Sox didn't play their game, neither defensively nor offensively. We wouldn't have won the pennant this year with the kind of baseball we played in that first game. But one game doesn't lick us, you know, and just watch the Sox from now on. It will be a different ball club on the field for the second fight.

PRAISE FOR REDS.

Before I show a few bad breaks we had and a few mistakes we made, I want to say something about Pat Moran's team. We have to give him and all his players a lot of credit for the ball game they played.

I noticed particularly the playing of Roush in centre field and I was stuck on him. He went back after a long drive by John Collins in the sixth inning and he had it timed perfectly all the way and was right there for an easy catch and I want to tell you he went some distance for that ball.

But that was only one good play he made. He backed up in the first inning and took a long one from Weaver with one hand when he was almost against the fence, but the thing he did that made a hit with me, was the way he backed up the other outfielders. He was behind Neale in right field whenever he was making a catch and he was behind Duncan in left when the ball was out there. He was in behind second for every play down there. He looked like a great player to me all the way.

SEEK WAY TO BEAT REUTHER.

Of course Reuther was the hero. And he deserved it too, but I don't think he can pitch another game like that against us. In fact, I think we can beat him the next time he comes out, but just the same, he was a big fellow in the first battle and deserved the big honors.

Now let me tell you some of the reasons the White Sox fell down besides their overconfidence. There was one bad break we had in that ball game that upset everything. If it hadn't gone against us, we might have won regardless of the overconfidence.

BREAK OF GAME.

You remember in that fourth inning when all the trouble started that gave the Reds five runs. Well, two men were out when the thing began and there should have been three out. The Sox failed to make a double play they can make ninety-nine times out of a hundred and it left the opening for the entire mess.

Duncan was on first and one was out when Kopf smashed one right into Cicotte's hands. Eddie had to wait a moment for Risberg to get to the bag; then he shot the ball there, and Risberg stumbled just as he got the ball and couldn't make his regular throw to first. Consequently he missed the double play which would have retired the side, those hits, that sent five runs in, followed that bad break.

KNOW REDS BETTER.

If that double play had been completed I think Eddie Cicotte would have pitched the entire game, and there's no telling what would have happened. There wasn't anything wrong with Cicotte. It would have been better had he pitched a spitter instead of a fast ball on two or three occasions in that fourth inning. He knows a lot more about the Reds' batters now than he did then, and he'll be back there for another game of ball.

I am sure it will be a different story next time.

Before the game began, Eddie warmed up in great style. He was as good as he ever was. There wasn't anything the matter with his arm. He told me he didn't think any team in the world could beat him, and I felt that way about it myself. But Eddie didn't know just what to hand up to those fellows all the time and they picked out the fast ball and cracked it.

SOX SOMEWHAT OFF.

There was something wrong with my gang, and I think it was their confidence. Before they went out on the field I told them to just go and play the game the same as they've played all Summer in the American League. That was good enough to beat out a lot of good ball clubs, and I think it is good enough to beat the Reds. But the gang didn't play their game. They failed a couple of times in the first two innings on hit-and-run plays, the same kind we've been pulling all Summer. They fell down on fielding plays, besides the chance to turn that double play in the fourth inning.

Why, in the same round, Neale hit a bounder out over second base if anything a little to Eddie Collins side of the bag. Now Collins has gone over there many a time and got the ball but he didn't get there that time. Regardless of that Risberg was there and almost caught the ball with one hand and if he had held it he would have made a play to first base and may have got his man. He's done it before.

But I'm not hollering a bit about being licked in the first game. You know, it takes five victories to win this series and I feel just as sure now as I did at the start, that the Sox will come through. It will be a different gang out there for the second game because there isn't any overconfidence among the fellows. Now they know they must play ball as they have played all Summer. I know they can do it, too, and I think that baseball such as we played all Summer will turn the trick in the end.

We'll have Lefty Williams on the slab for the second game and there will be a fighting gang behind him.

Mrs. Pat Moran Is Happiest Rooter at Redland

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—There were thousands of happy fans at Redland after the fourth inning of the first game, yet but little attention was paid to the happiest of them all by the baseball maddened throng. She sat up in Box 14, and when the Reds' batting rally was at its height stood up and cheered with the others. Incidentally she waved her hand to her husband and he waved back from the coaching lines, for the lady in question was Mrs. Patrick Moran, wife of the manager of the successful Reds.

"REDS OUTCLASSED SOX," WRITES MANAGER MORAN

By PAT MORAN,
Manager of Cincinnati Reds.

It surprised a lot of people, but it didn't surprise me.

The bulk of fandom thought of the Reds merely as a collection of "Misfit and Outcasts". figured perhaps that they would crack in many places when tested by World Series fire. But I'd lived with those boys through a bitter Summer-long campaign and came to know what the sport-loving public learned today.

And that is that the Cincinnati Reds of 1919 constitute one of the greatest ball clubs that ever fought a titular battle under the National League standard.

Gameness, courage, belief in themselves, brains plus amazing mechanical ability—that's what won for the Reds. And those are the assets that I'm banking upon to carry them through this series without many slop-overs, right also on to the crest of the baseball world.

The boys won today because they outclassed the White Sox in every department of play; because they showed infinitely greater ability than the Sox. And throughout the whole game those boys of mine exhibited no trace of nervousness; showed nothing but superlative confidence. And confidence ever has been half the battle. With the first game "in"—and won by probably the most spectacular batting seen in any inaugural duel—I'd say that we have the edge on the Sox—a fairly sizeable one. That first game counts a lot.

KNEW SCOTTISH WOULD WIN.

I opened with "Dutch" Reuther because figured that the great southpaw could hold the Sox in check. I wasn't afraid that the kid would "blow" as so many had predicted he'd pitched in many a tight game throughout the year and I clung to the belief that "Dutch" could whip the Sox, and he did.

There shouldn't be any great amazement over the fact that the boys hammered Eddie Cicotte out of the box. I felt sure the game was "on ice" for us when they sent their great right hander to the mound. Eddie is remarkable pitcher—no disputing that. But Eddie is just the type that the boys like to bat against. All year they've pounded men who have a pitching style like Cicotte's, and they'll hit him any time he starts.

SURPRISED AT BUSTING ATTACK.

I'll say right now that the Sox surprised me by their opening methods. They started with a bunting game—the tactics that indicated they figured they could beat us with two or three runs at the most. Maybe it was a strategic play, but I'll say that if the Sox want to do any winning from now on they've got to figure on getting more that two or three runs per game. For the Reds are on a hitting spree just now and they aren't going to subside so far as batting.

The boys are determined to make it two in a row. And they're determined not nothing stop them. It'll be "Slim" Sallee or Jimmy Ring on the mound for us. I'm undecided just now, but the chances favor the left hander. But no matter who pitches you can bet on it that he'll be a pitcher in shape to win, and a pitcher backed by a ball club quite frequently referred to as "a mighty team." That one which I am sure will demonstrate its absolute superiority in the game.

BUTLER FACES HARD GAME IN DOYLE

By JACK CONWAY.

Walter Butler of Revere and Paul Doyle of this city will clash in a twelve round 'bout at the Casino A. C of Lynn tonight. It is one of the most important welterweight tussles arranged by a local club in many months.

Butler is an idol with the Lynn fans as a result of his long string of victories. Jack Dowd's protege has been boxing faster of late than ever before. His aggressive style of milling, plus a stinging punch, have enabled him to crush all opposition.

In Doyle, the Revere welterweight will be opposed by one of the best 142-pounders in the East. Doyle proved his class by his victory over Young Goula. Chick West and Joe Welsh.

Frank Ducey has arranged a peppery preliminary card. K. O. Charley Elkins of the South End and Joe Fuller who calls Beverly home, will furnish the thrills in the semi-final whirl of eight sessions. Fred Bryson of Malden and Harry Nelson of this city will go over the jumps in a six-round affair, while George Robbins of Roxbury and Young Leonard of Chelsea will do the honors in another preliminary.

Arthur Ross of the South End instead of Johnny Williams of Cambridge will oppose Willie Corbett, Somerville lightweight, in the eight-round bout at the Commercial A. C's show tomorrow night. Ross is a rugged fighter and should cause Corbett plenty of trouble.

Johnny Sullivan, South Boston lightweight, and Tony Viera of New Bedford will go over the jumps in a ten-round contest. There will be another ten-session affair in which Johnny Ven of Chelsea and Billy Carney of New Bedford will furnish the thrills.

Boston will be very much back on the boxing map next week with shows at the Fenway A. A., Armory A. A. and Commercial A. C.

A capacity crowd is expected to be on hand at Mechanics Building Monday night to see Jake (Young) Ahearn battle Johnny Wilson. There is intense rivalry between these boxers and a torrid tussle is assured. Marty Killilea says that Wilson is planning to knock Ahearn out with a view to his [illegible] so that the South Boston man will be unable to set up any claim to a foul.

Barney Adair of New York will be back in our midst at the Armory Club next Tuesday night. He will have Jimmy Hill, Australian lightweight, as an opponent. Hill has [illegible] had all kinds of trouble getting bouts since he came to this country. Boxers of his own weight refuse to meet him for fear of being defeated. He will give away ten pounds to Adair, but believes that his speed and punching ability will enable him to overcome this handicap.

Danny Morgan's outburst in New York about the large sums of money he bat on Eddie Fitzsimmons in the southpaw's bout with Young Kloby is bunk. Billy Bell, manager of Kloby, declared that the alleged side-bet of $3,000 to $5,000 Morgan made with him was a fake. He says Morgan insisted on the side bet for advertising purposes. Bell asserted he merely wanted Morgan to put up $1,000 as a forfeit for the appearance of Fitzsimmons.

Morgan's charge that the Boston gamblers lost heavily on Fitzsimmons is more bunk. Every gambler in Boston had the tip Kloby was sure to win the day before the contest.

CINCINNATI is one big asylum with the keepers acting just like the patients. The town is nuts with baseball. They ought to label the burg Cincinutty.

EVERYBODY is eating, sleeping and drinking baseball. This is the first year they haven't smelled it.

THE town's premier astronomer spent last night standing at the moon to see whether it had a Spalding label on it. Street car conductors throw collected nickels into the air and catch 'em like outfielders. If the jit stays on the beltrope, it belongs to the company. Motorman gets an assist on the play.

REUTHER is the municipal pet. Crowds gave him money, cigars and recipes for making red eye out of gasoline and camphor balls. When a Cincinnati fan is right, you can have anything he's got. By the time the series is ended, Reuther should have a stable of electric pianos, seven left-footed shoe trees and all the straw hats he can carry.

IMPOSSIBLE to have horned a needle into the ball park unless you folded it up. Forty thousand birds chirped 'emselves bowlegged. Everybody hoarse and buying cough drops. Smith Brothers' whiskers will sprout another foot when they hear the glad news.

NOT much caroling from the Chicago bunch. Kid Gleason flatdogged it away from the park singing some mournful and appropriate hymn of hate. Sounded something like the Mother Whale's Lullaby at Eventide.

MAYOR of Cincinutty breathed much looser when he piped the score.

SINCE Omaha stagted the fad, a Mayor's life ain't worth a beer check. If a guy has to be hung, the crowd ought to use a rubber rope. Matches his collar and doesn't hurt anybody.

REORDER TO COMPETE AT THE LEGION GAMES

George Bronder, national javelin champion for six years, will be one of the national champions to compete in the three-day athletic carnival of the American Legion at Braves Field, October 9, 10 and 11. Devaney is the three-mile steeplechase champion, and his greatest rival, apparently, will be Charles Powe, also of New York, the national five-mile champion.

OWN SLOW WORK IN FIELD BEAT CICOTTE

By HUGH S. FULLERTON.

Cincinnati, Oct. 2.—Splash went the dope. Gleason led his ace and Moran trumped and led his strong suit his left-hander, and won the initial game of the world's series, 3 to 1.

The backers of the White Sox are in a condition approximating a panic, while the Sox themselves are more confident than ever. The backers declare that the pitching weakness of the Sox threatened to be fatal, while the Sox claim that, in spite of Cicotte's failure they showed the class and the ability to win. In fact, I find the White Sox more confident that they have the better club than they were before the first gun was fired.

BLAMES CICOTTE.

One play upset all the game, spilled the dope and sent Cicotte to the showers. There is no excuse whatever for the ace of the White Sox. He was pitching ball built from the start and, when he had the chance to save himself he threw it away by delayed infielding. He lost an easy double play in the fourth inning, a double play which ought to have retired the Reds without a run and he alone was to blame. That play decided the game and now the victory maddened Cincinnatians believe it also decided the world championship.

There is no telling how long Cicotte could have staved off the defeat had he made that play properly. He was being hit and the Reds were interpreting from the start, but had he managed to pass that point the chance is still would have favored Chicago. The play came with two out, Duncan on first and Kopf hitting. Kopf cracked the ball straight to Cicotte. Then Cicotte waited before he whirled to throw down to Risberg for the force out. Kopf is not fast and the play could be certain double play and the end of the inning but Cicotte, after slowing up the play also threw low. He forced out the runner but Risberg, in diving to get the low throw, fumbled, stumbled over the bag and before he could recover and make the throw Kopf was safely seated.

MORAN SWITCHES PLAY.

Right there Moran switched his tactics and ordered the assault, and the Reds attacked with the same spirit and force that have carried them through their own league fight. They commenced ripping the first ball offered them and man after man sent his screaming through or over to Infield Work. In the attack ended the Reds had accumulated five runs and the issue for the day was dead as the White Sox heaven.

From that instant all was joy in Redland. The White Sox never got a chance and the Reds simply walloped in hits and runs and won as they pleased. Another pitching misfall, with everything in his advantage, was a bit wobbly and tired in spots, but the Reds were in no position where they had to attack to get runs. They needed only one in the first swift and not especially well played game, did they have a chance. Then they failed, and after that failure never could gain an opening.

WHITE SOX LOOKED GOOD.

It sounds rather ridiculous to say that a team beaten, 5 to 1, looked as good or better than the winners, but this was true. The Reds looked very ordinary at times in the first inning when they scored once. In that round a hit by pitched ball, a hard single, a long sacrifice fly and a base on balls and a steal yielded them only one run. Daubert remained anchored at first base while Jackson count a fairly long fly and lobbed the ball to the plate. He almost could have walked to second yet made no move and the Reds then and there lost one probable run and two possible runs.

In fact, so far as the fine inner points of the game go, the White Sox played the ball and played it cleanly and without a sign of disengagement. There was not much wasted ball in the game. The chief point was the spirit with which the Reds attacked. They seemed to know from the start that the battle was not between the league teams and they rushed the attack at the proper moment. Moran showed a great knowledge of the batting ability of the team. He ordered the attack on the first ball route three different times and each time it worked—and if such a system of attack works once in a game it usually is sufficient. After the fourth lesson he had no choice as to his style of assault. The only thing was a series of hits.

(Copyrighted, 1919, by Hearst's International Library Co.)

RED HITS NO SURPRISE.

The Red hitting was not a surprise, excepting in the case of Daubert, who was the joke of one World's Series and threatens now to be a hero. He shared the honors with Reuther, who mauled out two triples and a single and drove in two runs and made more than enough runs to win the game.

The White Sox hit Reuther not quite as well as they were used to do. It is a cinch they would have hit him harder but for the fact that they were working under a heavy handicap after the fourth. For Reuther's hitting and [illegible] combining was pitch perceptibly toward the finish. He was wobbly from the beat and [illegible] toward the finish. Moran playing safe, was forced to hold him on the base and allow him to [illegible] for the out. The box would stage a belated rally.

It is evident that the Reds carry more punch and more confidence than the White Sox figured them to have. Their hitting [illegible] and their outfield work was ragged and uncertain. Two balls fell [illegible] to have been handled and [illegible] Kopf made a spectacle of himself. He let one short [illegible] fall after getting his hands on it, a ball by the way, that should have been caught by Kopf. He caught another with one hand which [illegible] have [illegible] with an effort and to misplayed at least four times. Kopf's [illegible] had during the early innings but improved as the game went along and perhaps the moral effect of the victory will be greater upon Kopf than upon the others.

REDS CONFIDENT.

The defeat of Cicotte is not important in its bearing upon the coming games of the series. The Reds did not figure to hit him at [illegible] and at the most figured to score [illegible] runs off his pitching. It was [illegible] from the first inning that he had nothing and that his famous shoot ball was not working. He settled early in the game and but for [illegible] ing the Reds their first run. It seemed to lack control and only showed a flash in the second round.

There have been rumors here for two days that Cicotte was not in condition. He denied those rumors. It was not his pitching that beat the game, but his fielding. However even had he fielded perfectly it is doubtful whether he could have beaten Long. The Reds know he was not there with the stuff and they were hitting him with all the confidence in the world.

The series now looks as if the Reds have a better than a fighting chance. The team is inspired and fighting hard. It is not as good a team numerically as the White Sox are, but in the superiority of team work will not count.

BIG SERIES NOTES

By TAD

Cincinnati, O., Oct. 2.—They're talking about just two guys here today, Eddie Roush and Walter Reuther.

There may be some swell fielders in the National League than Roush [illegible] showed them all up yesterday. He went back to the centerfield fence after Felsch's neck cantered over to right for another clout, into left for another and was all over the field for another home player, that boy!

Reuther not only let down the Windy City lads with six hits, but grabbed off two triples and a single himself. He drove in four runs and scored one himself.

In front of the Cincinnati bench there were 144 bats. The White Sox brought over 124 clubs.

They're betting even money on the local team today. Yesterday the Chicago lads were favorites.

Guys with red kellys are all over town. This would be a bad joint for some loud to come into, [illegible] where you go there is Red staring you in the face.

Five former managers of the Reds are here. They are Jack Griffith, Hank O'Day, Joe Tinker, Buck Herzog and Christy Mathewson.

Cicotte hit one and walked another of the first four men who faced him.

Neither Jackson nor Felsch the White Sox sluggers, got anything that smelled like a hit.

ELECT HARVARD CAPTAIN ON FRIDAY

The election of a Harvard football captain will be made Friday noon after the players have had their luncheon at the Varsity Club. Forty men, comprising the first team, are [illegible].

There are three logical candidates for the position, Eddie Casey, the fleet-footed halfback from Natick; Ralph Horween, the keen all around kicker and line backer, and Billie Murray the astute quarterback. All three have their fellows [illegible] for the captaincy [illegible].

Boston College forenoons puzzled the varsity for a while in practice, but when the men got used to them the seconds who were masquerading as the Maroon and old gold eleven, found themselves with the ball but nowhere to advance it.

Ralph Horween missed a drop kick [illegible] a touchdown, after Eddie Casey and Swede Nelson helped bring the ball forty yards to the scene of battle with all the confidence in the world.

The series now looks as if the Reds have a better than a fighting chance. The team is inspired and fighting hard. It is not as good a team numerically as the White Sox are, but in the superiority of team work will not count.

HALFBACK NEVILLE HURT IN PRACTICE AT YALE

New Haven, Oct. 2 — Although Halfback Joe Neville dislocated his elbow Tuesday it is expected that he will not miss more than two of the season's games. There are no complications whatever and he will be in uniform [illegible].

The Fecundity of Fish

THE most prolific fish is the cod, the yield of which averages about 45,000,000 eggs each season. Many other kinds of fish are exceedingly prolific. More than 36,000 eggs have been counted in a herring, 38,000 in a smelt, 1,000,000 in a sole, 1,120,000 in a roach, 3,000,000 in a sturgeon, 546,000 in a mackerel and 1,357,000 in a flounder.

A MYSTERY STORY OF NEW YORK LIFE

"Society for the Redistribution of Superfluous Wealth" Terrorizes Millionaires

By Arthur Somers Roche

(Whose novels have placed him in the front rank as a writer of detective stories)

The Action So Far

John Ha[illegible], [illegible] and captain of industry, has employed Hubert Allaire, young lawyer, to do some work for him. A criminal impersonates Allaire and reveals himself as a member of "The Society for the Redistribution of Superfluous Wealth." He threatens [illegible] to summon aid. The visitor almost kills him and escapes. Arrested later, Allaire proves a perfect alibi. Police [illegible] are puzzled. Meanwhile three other millionaires are [illegible]. Allaire receives a letter from the society and talks over [illegible] letter with Anne Allison, [illegible] ce. Blake is replaced by Heenan, a famous detective. Millionaire Tobey is kidnaped by the dread society. Heenan finds the package of supposed [illegible] money to contain only waste paper. The master criminal had bound and gagged Wilkins' chauffeur and escaped with the real cash. Allaire thinks he recognizes Courtney driving a suspected taxi.

"I'M that case," he said, "I shall hardly leave town." He walked to the library door. "I am worn out," he said. "If you'll have Maggie bring me up a little luncheon, I think I'll have it in my room. And after that, please don't disturb me. Of course, I may go out—I don't know. You'll be at home?"

"I don't think so—all afternoon," she said. "I—I may see Bob"

His eyes narrowed.

"Against my wishes?"

"Against your wishes, uncle, I told you [illegible] might [illegible] needed me. I think he does now. He was strange over the telephone, and I know it wasn't drink. I may telephone him. I want to see him."

If he felt any irritation, only his coldness showed it.

"Very well, my dear. By the way, are the two alleged guardians outside?"

She shook her head.

A Moment of Failing

"Reliefs came for them this morning, but later they sent in word that Mr. Heenan had decided that they were needed elsewhere and were not needed here. They said that they'd be back, perhaps, later"

"Stupid boobies, anyway! he commented. "I can protect myself."

He passed through the door; she heard him stumble, and was at his side instantly, her strong, young arms around him. His face was ghastly white.

"Uncle," she cried, "Uncle!"

He breathed a moment, then softly pushed her arms from about him.

"It's nothing [illegible] nothing. My heart—that's all. I'm tired a little, rest, and I'll be all right. I tell [illegible] right, my dear."

But she insisted on going to his room with him, and herself superintended the light luncheon he had wished for.

Later she tucked him into a huge armchair and left him with a book. Then she went downstairs into the library. She was [illegible] intention to telephone Allaire and ask his advice about her uncle.

She hesitated to call in a doctor without her uncle's consent, for she feared that such a visit might make him more nervous, and she felt that his [illegible] nervousness was due to nervousness. She decided to speak with Allaire But her uncle's door was open, and he would hear her talking. She determined to telephone from the Marigantte.

Allaire and Blake had finished their drink. They had decided to carry out their first intention of investigating the resorts frequented by Casey Red, and had just summoned another taxi when Allaire saw Allison crossing the [illegible] a seat.

"Should [illegible] you [illegible] a cab quite close, and then her face, which had been somber, lighted in a way that brought the blood racing to his temples.

"I was about to telephone you," she said. "I'm glad Uncle is"—She became aware that Allaire was not [illegible] and [illegible] Allaire introduced to Blake and presented him.

Two Ruined Men

"You were going somewhere?" asked Allison. Her lover immediately dismissed the taxi.

"It can wait," he said. "What were you going to telephone me about, Allison? But you look tired. Let's go inside"

"[illegible] the Martinette. "Blake was police commissioner until yesterday, Allison," said Allaire. "Today, like myself, he is practically a ruined man, and we are working together on the problem that has wrecked us. But your uncle?"

They had seated themselves in one of the public parlors.

"He's not well," Allison answered. "His nerves—tell me. What on earth did you want to know if he was at home—so impatiently? You didn't have a word for me. And uncle was furious. He said you'd been drinking, and—it upset him so that he almost fainted. Why did you do it?"

Allaire hesitated But Blake took up the question and answered it"

"[illegible] "I [illegible] care," he answered. "He looked familiar to Allaire. We decided that he was [illegible] Wilkins' chauffeur. Do you know that he was to receive a half million [illegible]"

"To [illegible] Allison.

"Well the money wasn't passed up-town But down-town, it seems, the society got hold of it. The murderer had impersonated the Wilkins chauffeur and escaped without hindrance. We didn't know that until just now, but it seemed that Allaire was right when he thought there was something familiar about the driver of the car when we met him coming uptown.

Was Not the Man

"Anyway, it wasn't Wilkins' chauffeur We gave chase, but he eluded us. Then Allaire, thinking that perhaps the man was bound uptown to do some deviltry—his kidnaped Tobey and made one attempt on your uncle Allaire thought that he might be planning some other attack against Mr. Courtney and we phoned to make sure that your uncle was at [illegible] been out we'd have [illegible] this is [illegible] with Wilkins as was and done our best to protect him."

"Thank you" said Allison Fra smiled sweetly and gratefully upon the ex-commissioner, and Allaire made up his mind that hereafter if there was any lying to be done to Allison, he'd do it himself.

"So that's why you were excited," she said to Allaire. "And the man in the auto got completely away?"

Allaire told her of the escape and gave a few more details that Heenan had told them over the telephone. Heenan had done this because it was more simple to confess first and ask them to keep silence toward any reporters. Not to let them guess part of the truth [illegible] [illegible] and done, and that fee[illegible] bound to secrecy.

Allison heard her lover through with suppressed excitement. When he finished

"Then the murderer came right up here—within a few rods of our house and—do you suppose he lives near here?" she asked.

"God knows," said Allaire. "But your uncle!"

Blake Asks Questions

"He's ill," she said. "Exhausted. He was brave last night, but today—after you telephoned—he's gone to pieces. I want him to go to the country—to our Maine camp. But he won't do that, because I won't go with him. And I won't go with him while you're here, and continued and glanced at Allaire with a flush that finished the sentence "You, I wanted to ask you if you think I'd better get a doctor for him?"

Heenan had given Allaire a very brief sketch of the night's happenings at the Courtney household, and now the lawyer demanded to know everything. Allison began with her adventure with the man who looked like her uncle and continued through to the present moment. Both men looked admiringly at her. Allaire took her hand and pressed it

"You brave girl!" he said. He would have said more, but Blake interrupted.

"Going back to the first event, Miss Courtney—you say that the man you took for your uncle had gray hair? How do you know?"

"It lifted his hat," she replied, "and I saw his hair then."

"But you didn't get close to him—close enough to touch him?"

"Why, I don't understand you! Why should I?" she added.

"Oh, I guess I'm fatified, too," smiled Blake. "But, really, I'd like to know more about [illegible] this coat you have on last night."

"I did," she replied.

"And do you know any gray-haired man? When did you have this coat brushed last, Miss Courtney?"

"Well, Blake," gasped Allaire, "don't you think—"

But his fiancee was impressed by Blake's evident sincerity.

On a Trail

"Why, I don't mind telling Mr Blake, Bob," she smiled. "Day before yesterday it came back from the tailors where it had been cleaned and pressed."

"Thank you!" said Blake. "Well then, since the coat came back, have you seen any gray-haired man besides the one that looked like your uncle?"

She pursed her lips.

"Probably I have, but—I don't remember any"

"For heaven's sake, Blake, what's got into you?" demanded Allaire. "What have gray-haired men got to do with Miss Courtney?"

"Nothing, I hope," said Blake. "Excuse me for such silly questions, I suppose that they were silly. I [illegible] too. But Miss [illegible] as [illegible] quality"

"You [illegible] answered. "Well [illegible] his man [illegible] near [illegible] you will, let us say to put his arms around you since that coat"

"Oh, look here, Blake!" said Allaire sternly. "I can't permit"

"Mr. Blake [illegible] insinuating that many men embrace me," laughed the girl. "I'm sure of that."

Blake inclined his head.

"I don't mean to be guilty of impertinence," he said. "Forgive me if my words seem like it, Allaire; I'd really like to know, you see."

The Only One

Allison shot an arch glance at her lover.

"Let me see," she said, musingly. "It's hard to remember just how many gentlemen have embraced me since yesterday or the day before. It makes it easier, though, when the inquiry is narrowed to include only the occasions when I wore this coat. However"—and she smiled mischievously at the furiously scowling Allaire—"if I must admit the incidents, why—uncle is the only one."

And then she reached forward and gave Allaire's hand a little squeeze that paid for the fun she'd been having with him.

"And that was when!" asked Blake.

"When I came in last evening, after seeing the stranger who resembles him," said Allison.

"Then—and" and Blake reached deftly forward and drew from under the lapel of her coat a gray hair about four inches long—"where did this come from?"

Allaire's blush became the flush of anger now.

Stocks Irregular in New York and Boston During the Morning

CRUCIBLE WAS WEAKEST STEEL

Recedes More Than Ten Points in an Active Market

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were regular in New York at noon, the majority showing losses. Just before 12 o'clock U. S. Steel was under its closing price of the previous session, for the first time during the month, many issues touched low prices for the forenoon in the second hour selling movement. Bears were aggressive and the supply of stocks seemed larger than for several months. Nothing in the news supported their raid, but it went along by the technical trading conditions. The market was active, first hour transactions totaling more than 370,000 shares.

Crucible broke badly soon after the start and at its lowest sold at 230. This was a decline of 10¾ this morning and a drop of 25 within the last four hours.

American Locomotive sold at the highest record price of 111¼. At 146¾ Kelly Springfield also established a new record high. Atlantic Gulf sold as high as 178 during the morning. American Woolen common touched 123¾. Keystone Tire was up more than five points at 68½, and Mexican Petroleum 4 at 225¾. Tobacco Products advanced 3¾ at 108¾, while Sumatra was up 3¾ at 113. None of these issues held all gains until noon.

In the foreign exchange market sterling rates were higher and market weak.

ADVANCED AT OPENING.

The majority of active issues advanced at the opening, steels being strong, with the exception of Midvale and Bethlehem B. Equipments and several oils sold higher. Largest gains on initial transactions were by Allis Chalmers, American Sugar, Kelly Springfield, Mexican Petroleum, Sumatra, Northern Pacific, Republic Steel and Southern Pacific. The improvement for rails was credited to belief that roads are to be restored to their owners at the end of 1920, the year the market became irregular within a few minutes, the price trend being uncertain. The tone was rather heavy during the first hour Trading was almost wholly by room traders and they were inclined to take the bear side, maintaining that a reaction was due after an upward movement which had lasted ten days or more.

CRUCIBLE WEAKENS.

Crucible was the weakest issue on the list, receding more than ten points within half an hour. Excepting American Tobacco, tobacco issues became strong, with Sumatra in the lead. Coppers were slow to show strength during the first hour, Anaconda declining 1 and American Woolen common. Atlantic Gulf opened lower, but rallied and made a substantial gain. By 11 o'clock the market was again strong. It is believed in financial districts that speculation will be subject to reactionary influences until the money strain is over and there is some declining tendency in regard to the steel strike. The result of the struggle to date is regarded as unfavorable by leading manufacturers. What will be done by the Senate committee is a matter of doubt, but a hands-off policy would please business men.

Cotton Market Opening

New York, Oct. 2.—The cotton market opened firm at an advance of 12 to 35 points in response to strong cables, unfavorable weather and bullish closing figures. The demand declared at the end of the three months' option list was rather easy with prices only 5 to 8 points net higher. December sold at 32.10, or 35 points; December, 32.40, up 34; March, 32.55, up 30; May, 32.52, up 32.

USING MORE OIL FOR INDUSTRIAL FUEL

Fear of a coal shortage in Europe and such an increased demand for the American product as to increase fuel costs greatly, is turning attention to oil as a substitute in industrial plants. It is estimated that mills around Pittsburgh will consume from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 barrels in the next twelve months. There are about 30 plants in that district now using it as fuel. The change has happened within three years. It is stated that where oil is once tried it has not been abandoned.

Oil producers and distributors say this indicates that it gives satisfactory service and that its use will increase.

Flogging of U. S. Soldiers Should Cause No Surprise

So the adventurer and monarchist Kolchak is flogging American soldiers in Russia in good old-fashioned style! Are we surprised? Why should we be surprised? Do we hear somebody say: "Why, these American soldiers were sent to Russia to help the Kolchak adventurer to restore monarchy and to destroy democracy and the right of self-determination among the Russian people. How then can Kolchak be flogging American soldiers? That is what the Russian bureaucrats and monarchists do to the poor devils of Russians who want to get a little bit of freedom."

But is this not what we are to expect when we stick our nose in everybody's business? We have earned the hatred of the Italian people since the close of the war because we denied to them their natural national aspirations and the territory that they were promised if they entered the war and it was successful through their efforts, as it was. Now, they have decided to take what the conference at Paris denied to them, and the British and French statesmen in Paris with their tongue in their cheeks and a grin on their faces have said, "Let Uncle Sam do it." So our urbane Secretary of the Navy, with all the innocence of a man stating a very usual thing, confesses to Congress that acting under orders of the statesmen at Paris, our sailors are now beginning to shed their blood in a war with the Italians without any declaration of war by Congress or any authorization by Congress or any knowledge on the part of Congress of what was contemplated or what was being done.

Rumania has defied the great statesmen at Paris—the fathers and masters of the League of Nations—and is taking what she wants out of the spoils of war in Hungary. Who will drive them back over their own border? Will the Paris statesmen send our troops to do it?

It is a part of the official record of the conferees at Paris that David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of England, expressed the opinion that Kolchak was an adventurer and a monarchist under whose standard all the old repudiated bureaucrats and corruptionists which disgraced Russia for centuries were gathering. These bureaucrats have been accustomed to putting down any symptom of independence by the Russian people with a Cossack whip and his spear and sword with the machine gun of the infantry.

Probably the American soldier and officer flogged showed a little independence, a little American spirit, and the instinct of the bureaucrat, of the tyrant of the Cossack officer, seized Kolchak or his agents and compelled him to use Cossack methods on the bodies of our American boys.

IT IS ALSO INTERESTING TO KNOW THAT THE JAPANESE TOOK SIDES WITH THESE COSSACKS AND MONARCHISTIC ADVENTURERS AND WARNED THE AMERICAN SOLDIERS HURRYING TO THE RESCUE of their comrades that if they interfered the Japanese would fight. This is the power we are building up against us with our Shantung surrenders.

Oh, what a fine mess it all is!! How proud the American people must be to see their flesh and blood used to destroy liberty in one of the greatest areas of the earth and to interpose Kolchak's black cloud of reaction across new found light of the Russian people, and then to see our young men humiliated with a whip!

We talk of anarchy, of lawlessness and of law and order and the Constitution. Where are all these evils and blessings, and who is violating them, and where are they being violated? Not in America, not by the poor or the working man, but in Russia and Italy by the highest of the American officials, all for the sake of the predatory rich, who follow armies as jackals and hyenas follow the bigger beasts of prey, and devour what the armies have not destroyed.

Government Fails in Duty to Wounded Fighters

The American Legion will hold its annual convention in Minneapolis on November 9th, 10th and 11th. The various States will hold legion conventions within the next few days to elect delegates to consider matters of importance to be brought to the attention of the national convention.

There is nothing ever so important to a man or a nation as keeping the faith; and, if it is possible, to grade the relative obligations of a nation's faith, no right-minded citizen could doubt that the most sacred faith of all in a nation is faithfulness to the obligations it has assumed toward the men who have been injured fighting for the nation. If there is no faith in governments toward its wounded soldiers there is no faith in government toward anything.

But there has been a failure on the part of the national government to carry out its obligation towards our wounded soldiers which savors distastefully of bad faith.

Millions have been placed at the disposal of the federal board to fulfill the country's obligation to the crippled soldiers. If more millions are needed, they will be forthcoming, so that the board may do its work in the real spirit of American gratitude. There is no limit to the amount which the American people will demand for the work of returning disabled men to civil life in a condition which will make them capable of competing successfully with physically normal men. The American people realize that it is good business to have our disabled men a force of workers rather than a force of loafers; and that it is the best kind of business to have them confident, satisfied workers rather than a force of incompetent, dissatisfied workers.

Here is the real spirit of the training situation—and it is taken from one of the so called "Opportunity Monographs" issued by the Federal Board for Vocational Education nearly a year ago with the thought of retraining and re-educating our disabled men was uppermost in the people's mind and the first groups of our disabled heroes were returning for the reconstruction processes in our home hospitals:

Training counts. You know it counts, for it was training that helped you to beat the Germans. It will count with you if you will take advantage of the opportunity Uncle Sam is making for you. You never understood what real training meant until you joined the army. You now understand what training means. Take it.

Now, the present federal board, charged with the duty of executing the will of Congress toward these wounded soldiers, rules that no man shall receive training who can return to his former job! Why this change of attitude by our bureaucracy?

It is the duty, not only of the American Legion and other kindred veteran associations, but of all good American citizens, to see that the training and employment opportunities which were promised our disabled men while they were in the trenches in France and in the hospitals abroad and at home are provided generously and without discouraging delays. Too many already have exemplified the old adage that "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." The official records of the federal board show that of the 16,000 placement cases handled, nearly 13,000 were self-placed, or, in other words, 80 per cent. of these men reduced to the verge of charity, and tired of waiting to hear from the federal board, found for themselves. That of itself, even without other evidence of incompetence and intolerable methods, is enough to warrant a demand that some man or force of men of broader vision and patriotic appreciation be placed in charge of the work of the Federal Board of Vocational Education to shape the future destiny of disabled soldiers and sailors.

Letters to the Editor

Conditions in Ireland

Editor Boston American:

It may be fairly presumed, from your publication of the current series of articles on Ireland, that you are desirous, in the interest of your readers, of seeing light thrown upon conditions in that country and of insuring that this process shall not be confined to an illumination acceptable only to Mr. De Valera and his following. It is in that belief that I desire to touch upon certain figures presented September 17, in the third of the series, without entering at the present time upon the more general features of the case presented by your contributor.

In telling your readers that Ireland's revenue in the year 1913-14 amounted to $48,135,000, Mr. De Valera refers to "the fraction of it that was spent in Ireland," omitting to mention that the entire revenue in question fell short of the cost of purely Irish government by $6,112,500. He is, or ought to be, as well aware as I am of what these figures mean—that Ireland was not only entirely relieved from imperial charges, including such material items as the cost of national defence, interest and sinking fund of the national debt and diplomatic expenses in every part of the world, but was, in addition, more than six million dollars to the good on the cost of internal administration.

It should be needless to point out the absurdity of comparing the cost of administering an integral part of the British Empire with the outlay found sufficient in Denmark, Greece and Switzerland, to say nothing of Mr. De Valera's divagations into Bolivia and a dozen other territories. But, as he raises this point, I would suggest that a far more appropriate field of comparison lies much nearer hand. Let us look for a moment at Scotland, with a population but little larger than Ireland's, taking the same year chosen by Mr. De Valera. Her contribution to the treasury of the United Kingdom amounted to $106,547,000, as against Ireland's $48,135,000. Nor does the contrast end there, for Scotland received back so little in imperial grants, etc., that she contributed on balance more than $56,000,000 to imperial objects, while Ireland, as already shown, came off with more than $6,000,000 on the other side of the ledger. Where does "Irish overtaxation" come in?

I do not forget that the foregoing figures refer to ante-bellum conditions, and that Mr. De Valera's fiscal explorations deal to some extent with Ireland's taxation in 1918. That date alone ought to be sufficient answer to his assertion that "out of the $176,025,000 paid by Ireland last year to the English treasury England expended only $85,100,000 in Ireland, less than one-half, and pocketed the handsome surplus of $91,015,000, as a direct profit from Ireland." Have the events of the last five years left Mr. De Valera so cold that he is ignorant of Britain's enormous war expenditure? What can be his state of mind in characterizing Ireland's contribution to that outlay, in a time of unexampled prosperity, as being "pocketed" by the treasury of a country which poured out billions in a real and effective defence of the "freedom" which he and his kind are incessantly mouthing.

He appears, indeed, to regard British rule as necessarily extravagant but what, I would ask, has been the consistent attitude of his adopted country whenever proposals for retrenchment in Irish expenditure have been made? To go no farther back than the year 1915, a British governmental committee took up the question of possible economies in civil administration. But no sooner was Ireland touched than the Irish Parliamentary Party let it be known that they would resist any proposals in the direction of reduction in that country.

It seems to me that figures and statements of the present character should be made available in conjunction with Mr. De Valera's contribution, and I am thus led to solicit the extension of your editorial courtesy to them.

JOHN S. HODSON.

Beverly.

Thanks for Editorials

Editor Boston American:

The members of the Bishop O'Dwyer Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Cambridge wish to thank the American for its splendid editorials on the League of Nations covenant. The cartoon showing Great Britain's six votes to our one is very instructive. Another on the six monarchies in the council against the three republics would be appreciated.

PARISIAN STAR TO BECOME A NUN

Read How a Dream Swayed Her in the Boston Sunday Advertiser

EVE LAVALLIERE, the most admired star of the Parisian stage, has left the footlight world, the stage with its frantic rush, its superficiality and its insincerity. Lavalliere is to become a nun.

Princes and statesmen have paid her court; jewels and gifts have been lavished upon her by admirers, some of whom she has never even seen. She is giving this up. She will exchange her life of pampered ease for the austere existence of a Carmelite sister. A dream is responsible for her decision.

Lavalliere tells the whole story of her change of heart, in her own words, in the magazine section of next week's Boston Sunday Advertiser. Be sure to read this extraordinary statement of a woman who is about to pass from the ken of the outside world. Never again will Lavalliere's beautiful face be seen in public. Her story is a remarkable one.

Joseph, the great Hebrew reformer of Egypt, had a real love story. The only romance of which we commonly think in connection with the prophet is the unfortunate experience which he is supposed to have had with Potiphar's wife. Today science is almost ready to make the assertion that the whole story of Potiphar's wife is a fabrication, or that, if true, it concerned some great man other than Joseph.

But Joseph had a romance, none the less. He wooed and won Asenath, the fairest woman in all Egypt, and was given her hand in marriage by no less a personage than Pharaoh himself.

These facts have recently come to light through the discovery of wall paintings in Egyptian tombs just opened. The complete story of Joseph's Egyptian adventures is told by the Rev. C. H. Levy in next week's Boston Sunday Advertiser.

America's mysterious master criminal has turned his attention of late to the spiriting away of thousands of dollars worth of raw silk—the tremendously valuable product of the Orient from which America's silken gowns are manufactured.

To date he and his agents have succeeded in making away with incredible amounts of baled silk. And the cleverness of the robberies has appalled the police in several great American cities.

The story of these mysterious robberies, the methods employed, and the means adopted by the silk manufacturers in their attempts to combat the master criminal are interestingly set forth in the Sunday Advertiser's Magazine Section next week.

Be sure to order your copy in good season.

THE ADVANTAGE OF BEING A "JOINER"

There are persons in every town or community who do not consider it worth while to "belong" to anything.

It may be church or other religious organization; it may be social or civic societies, educational or labor meetings; when it comes to banding together to accomplish any certain thing, they are not there.

And why?

With some the reason is financial. They think even a small sum each week is money thrown away unless it buys actual "eats," clothing or shelter.

With others it seems to be a matter of pride to hold themselves aloof.

And then there are always those who won't belong to anything of which they are not head and shoulders over the other members.

And the soreheads—they must not be forgotten—had a turn-down somewhere or somehow once, and never again for them.

Now, the surest way in the world to become sore and grouchy and crotchety and mean is to continually flock by oneself.

You may think you are sufficient unto yourself, but if you are human, you need companionship and variety and the community spirit—BELONG.

How Mr. Phipps Digs
The Big Iron Ball
The Revolution We Need

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1919.

Permanent improvements are alone important. Learn how Mr. Phipps is digging his cellar opposite the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York City.

Once Mr. Phipps was very poor. He sold gun powder an clerk in a store and when his long day was ended he walked eight miles to keep books for a blacksmith not good at figures.

He, the blacksmith and Andrew Carnegie went into the steel business together. They were Scotch, careful and made money, tens of millions.

Along came J. Pierpont Morgan, not Scotch, not careful. He bought them out for hundreds of millions, added a thousand millions of watered stock to the financial salad and they were all very rich.

Now Mr. Phipps, having torn down the building in which Vernon Castle used to give dancing lessons, is taking out the rock from the bottom of his deep cellar. You will see hope for the solution of our labor problem in the way Mr. Phipps digs solid rock, with one single working man in the hole, thirty or forty feet below the sidewalk.

Dynamite has loosened the rock. It lies in huge pieces weighing tons or more. A hundred men down there could not lift one of them. In days when pyramids were built thousands would have sweated and died under the lash, with barely enough to eat, moving that rock.

Today Mr. Phipps' rock mover gets $6.00 or $7.00 a day, and the hardest work he does is to move his right hand gently. There is a steel crane on the sidewalk, the engine lowers and pulls up steel cables with an iron hook at the end.

At the solitary workman's feet lies a great solid iron ball, that must weigh half a ton, half as big as a barrel. The workman beckons, the steel hook drops beside the iron ball and is attached by a fish-hook arrangement to which is fastened a long rope.

The ball is hauled up into the air forty feet above one of the huge stone blocks, a slight pull on the rope, the ball falls with terrific force and shatters the rock into small pieces. This operation is repeated until all the big rocks are broken conveniently small.

If you put fifty men with sledge hammers pounding for an hour they could not shatter those blocks of granite as they are shattered by the huge iron ball falling once. The workman's moving finger, the engineer and a few pounds of coal have done all the work.

Next workmen will put the small pieces of rock into wooden carriers. Directed by the waving finger of the rock-breaker these boxes are lifted, no man making any physical effort, dropped by the engine on big automobiles and carried away.

Thus Mr. Phipps, who keeps young by working, digs his cellar out of the solid rock of Manhattan, using the power of gravitation locked up in an iron ball to break his rock, the power of steam expanding to haul it up and the power of gasoline exploding to haul it away.

In this cellar-digging process you see what will be ultimately the solution of the labor and production problem—with steam, gasoline, brains and half a dozen workmen. At the most Mr. Phipps will dig his rock cellar more rapidly than a thousand men could have dug it in the old days.

And so he is saving labor in his stone cellar, enabling one man to do the work of a hundred, so labor is being saved in the fields by harvesting machinery, and in the mills, where a machine in one day can do the work of a thousand needle women.

Men, machinery and brains combined will produce plenty for all, including reasonable leisure for all, good pay for those that work, fair profit for those that invest, generous pay for those that invent and improve.

The trouble has been, in the past, unwillingness to give workers a fair share of the increased production.

That man in the stone cellar, moving his finger, intelligently directing the steam engine above, does the work that a hundred men used to do. It is not too much to give him for a day's work that ten men used to get. Even at that price you are ahead the labor of ninety men.

With others it seems to be a matter of pride to hold themselves aloof.

And then there are always those who won't belong to anything of which they are not head and shoulders over the other members.

And the soreheads—they must not be forgotten—had a turn-down somewhere or somehow once, and never again for them.

Now, the surest way in the world to become sore and grouchy and crotchety and mean is to continually flock by oneself.

You may think you are sufficient unto yourself, but if you are human, you need companionship and variety and the community spirit—BELONG.
